

LITTLE BROWN & CO.

Wm Hendrie,
Hamilton,
Canada.

FRANCE AND ENGLAND

IN NORTH AMERICA.

A SERIES OF HISTORICAL NARRATIVES.

BY

FRANCIS PARKMAN,

AUTHOR OF "HISTORY OF THE CONSPIRACY OF PONTIAC" AND "THE OREGON TRAIL."

PART SEVENTH.

BOSTON:

LITTLE, BROWN, AND COMPANY.

1887.

Copyright, 1884,
By FRANCIS PARKMAN.

University Press:
JOHN WILSON AND SON, CAMBRIDGE.

THE PORTRAIT OF WOLFE.

THE portrait of WOLFE in the present edition of this book was never before made known to the public. The picture from which it is taken was painted from life by Highmore, an English artist well known in the last century. When Wolfe, then a mere boy, received his first commission and was about to join the army, he caused his likeness to be painted in uniform, and gave it, as a token of attachment, to Reverend Samuel Francis Swinden, Vicar of Greenwich, whose pupil he had been, and whose friend he remained for life. The descendants of this gentleman still possess it; and it is to their kindness, and especially to that of his great-great-granddaughter, Miss Florence Armstrong, that I owe the photograph which is here reproduced. It is believed that Wolfe never again sat for his portrait. After his death his mother caused a miniature to be taken from the Highmore picture, and from this several enlarged copies were afterwards made.

The portrait in possession of Admiral Warde, hitherto supposed to be an original, now seems to be one of these copies. It appeared first in Wright's "Life of Wolfe," and is the same that was engraved for the early editions of "Montcalm and Wolfe." The existence of the present more trustworthy and interesting picture has been known to few besides its fortunate possessors.

WOLFE.

AGED 16.

MONTAULM

WOLFE.

BY

FRANCIS PARKMAN,

AUTHOR OF "PIONEERS OF FRANCE IN THE NEW WORLD," "THE JESUITS
IN AMERICA," "LA SALLE AND THE DISCOVERY OF THE WEST," "THE OLD REGIME IN CANADA," AND
"COUNT FRONTENAC AND NEW FRANCE UNDER LOUIS XIV."

VOLUME II.

NEW YORK:

HENRY HOLT AND COMPANY
PUBLISHERS.

1881.

MONTCALM

AND WOLFE.

BY

FRANCIS PARKMAN,

AUTHOR OF "PIONEERS OF FRANCE IN THE NEW WORLD," "THE JESUITS
IN NORTH AMERICA," "LA SALLE AND THE DISCOVERY OF THE GREAT WEST," "THE OLD REGIME IN CANADA," AND
"COUNT FRONTENAC AND NEW FRANCE UNDER LOUIS XIV."

VOL. II.

TENTH EDITION.

BOSTON:
LITTLE, BROWN, AND COMPANY.

1887.

Copyright, 1884,
BY FRANCIS PARKMAN.

CONTENTS.

CHAPTER XVI.

1757, 1758.

A WINTER OF DISCONTENT.

	PAGE
Boasts of Loudon. — A Mutinous Militia. — Panic. — Accusations of Vaudreuil. — His Weakness. — Indian Barbarities. — Destruction of German Flats. — Discontent of Montcalm. — Festivities at Montreal. — Montcalm's Relations with the Governor. — Famine. — Riots. — Mutiny. — Winter at Ticonderoga. — A desperate Bush-fight. — Defeat of the Rangers. — Adventures of Roche and Pringle	1

CHAPTER XVII.

1753-1760.

BIGOT.

His Life and Character. — Canadian Society. — Official Festivities. — A Party of Pleasure. — Hospitalities of Bigot. — Desperate Gambling. — Château Bigot. — Canadian Ladies. — Cadet. — La Friponne. — Official Rascality. — Methods of Peculation. — Cruel Frauds on the Acadians. — Military Corruption. — Péan. — Love and Knavery. — Varin and his Partners. — Vaudreuil and the Peculators. — He defends Bigot; praises Cadet and Péan. — Canadian Finances. — Peril of Bigot. — Threats of the Minister. — Evidence of Montcalm. — Impending Ruin of the Confederates	17
---	----

CHAPTER XVIII.

1757, 1758.

PITT.

	PAGE
Frederic of Prussia. — The Coalition against him. — His desperate Position. — Rossbach. — Leuthen. — Reverses of England. — Weakness of the Ministry. — A Change. — Pitt and Newcastle. — Character of Pitt. — Sources of his Power. — His Aims. — Louis XV. — Pompadour. — She controls the Court, and directs the War. — Gloomy Prospects of England. — Disasters. — The New Ministry. — Inspiring Influence of Pitt. — The Tide turns. — British Victories. — Pitt's Plans for America. — Louisbourg, Ticonderoga, Duquesne. — New Commanders. — Naval Battles	35

CHAPTER XIX.

1758.

LOUISBOURG.

Condition of the Fortress. — Arrival of the English. — Gallantry of Wolfe. — The English Camp. — The Siege begun. — Progress of the Besiegers. — Sallies of the French. — Madame Drucour. — Courtesies of War. — French Ships destroyed. — Conflagration. — Fury of the Bombardment. — Exploit of English Sailors. — The End near. — The White Flag. — Surrender. — Reception of the News in England and America. — Wolfe not satisfied. — His Letters to Amherst. — He destroys Gaspé. — Returns to England	52
--	----

CHAPTER XX.

1758.

TICONDEROGA.

Activity of the Provinces. — Sacrifices of Massachusetts. — The Army at Lake George. — Proposed Incursion of Lévis. — Perplexities of Montcalm. — His Plan of Defence. — Camp of Abercromby. — His Character. — Lord Howe. — His Popularity. — Embarkation of Abercromby. — Advance down Lake George. — Landing. — Forest Skirmish. — Death of Howe. — Its Effects. — Position of the French. — The Lines of Ticonderoga. — Blunders of Abercromby. — The Assault. — A Frightful Scene. — Incidents of the Battle. — British Repulse. — Panic. — Retreat. — Triumph of Montcalm	83
---	----

CHAPTER XXI.

1758.

FORT FRONTENAC.

PAGE

The Routed Army. — Indignation at Abercromby. — John Cleaveland and his Brother Chaplains. — Regulars and Provincials. — Provincial Surgeons. — French Raids. — Rogers defeats Marin.
— Adventures of Putnam. — Expedition of Bradstreet. — Capture of Fort Frontenac 114

CHAPTER XXII.

1758.

FORT DUQUESNE.

Dinwiddie and Washington. — Brigadier Forbes. — His Army. — Conflicting Views. — Difficulties. — Illness of Forbes. — His Sufferings. — His Fortitude. — His Difference with Washington. —
Sir John Sinclair. — Troublesome Allies. — Scouting Parties. — Boasts of Vaudreuil. — Forbes and the Indians. — Mission of Christian Frederic Post. — Council of Peace. — Second Mission of Post. — Defeat of Grant. — Distress of Forbes. — Dark Prospects. — Advance of the Army. — Capture of the French Fort.
— The Slain of Braddock's Field. — Death of Forbes 131

CHAPTER XXIII.

1758, 1759.

THE BRINK OF RUIN.

Jealousy of Vaudreuil. — He asks for Montcalm's Recall. — His Discomfiture. — Scene at the Governor's House. — Disgust of Montcalm. — The Canadians Despondent. — Devices to encourage them. — Gasconade of the Governor. — Deplorable State of the Colony. — Mission of Bougainville. — Duplicity of Vaudreuil. — Bougainville at Versailles. — Substantial Aid refused to Canada. — A Matrimonial Treaty. — Return of Bougainville.
— Montcalm abandoned by the Court. — His Plans of Defence. — Sad News from Candiac. — Promises of Vaudreuil 164

CHAPTER XXIV.

1758, 1759.

WOLFE.

PAGE

The Exiles of Fort Cumberland. — Relief. — The Voyage to Louisbourg. — The British Fleet. — Expedition against Quebec. — Early Life of Wolfe. — His Character. — His Letters to his Parents. — His Domestic Qualities. — Appointed to command the Expedition. — Sails for America 181

CHAPTER XXV.

1759.

WOLFE AT QUEBEC.

French Preparation. — Muster of Forces. — Gasconade of Vaudreuil. — Plan of Defence. — Strength of Montcalm. — Advance of Wolfe. — British Sailors. — Landing of the English. — Difficulties before them. — Storm. — Fireships. — Confidence of French Commanders. — Wolfe occupies Point Levi. — A Futile Night Attack. — Quebec bombarded. — Wolfe at the Montmorenci. — Skirmishes. — Danger of the English Position. — Effects of the Bombardment. — Desertion of Canadians. — The English above Quebec. — Severities of Wolfe. — Another Attempt to burn the Fleet. — Desperate Enterprise of Wolfe. — The Heights of Montmorenci. — Repulse of the English 195

CHAPTER XXVI.

1759.

AMHERST. NIAGARA.

Amherst on Lake George. — Capture of Ticonderoga and Crown Point. — Delays of Amherst. — Niagara Expedition. — La Corne attacks Oswego. — His Repulse. — Niagara besieged. — Aubry comes to its Relief. — Battle. — Rout of the French. — The Fort taken. — Isle-aux-Noix. — Amherst advances to attack it. — Storm. — The Enterprise abandoned. — Rogers attacks St. Francis. — Destroys the Town. — Sufferings of the Rangers . . . 235

CHAPTER XXVII.

1759.

THE HEIGHTS OF ABRAHAM.

PAGE

Elation of the French. — Despondency of Wolfe. — The Parishes laid waste. — Operations above Quebec. — Illness of Wolfe. — A New Plan of Attack. — Faint Hope of Success. — Wolfe's Last Despatch. — Confidence of Vaudreuil. — Last Letters of Montcalm. — French Vigilance. — British Squadron at Cap-Rouge. — Last Orders of Wolfe. — Embarkation. — Descent of the St. Lawrence. — The Heights scaled. — The British Line. — Last Night of Montcalm. — The Alarm. — March of French Troops. — The Battle. — The Rout. — The Pursuit. — Fall of Wolfe and of Montcalm	259
--	-----

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1759.

FALL OF QUEBEC.

After the Battle. — Canadians resist the Pursuit. — Arrival of Vaudreuil. — Scene in the Redoubt. — Panic. — Movements of the Victors. — Vaudreuil's Council of War. — Precipitate Retreat of the French Army. — Last Hours of Montcalm. — His Death and Burial. — Quebec abandoned to its Fate. — Despair of the Garrison. — Lévis joins the Army. — Attempts to relieve the Town. — Surrender. — The British occupy Quebec. — Slanders of Vaudreuil. — Reception in England of the News of Wolfe's Victory and Death. — Prediction of Jonathan Mayhew	299
---	-----

CHAPTER XXIX.

1759, 1760.

SAINTE-FOY.

Quebec after the Siege. — Captain Knox and the Nuns. — Escape of French Ships. — Winter at Quebec. — Threats of Lévis. — Attacks. — Skirmishes. — Feat of the Rangers. — State of the Garrison. — The French prepare to retake Quebec. — Advance of Lévis. — The Alarm. — Sortie of the English. — Rash Determination of Murray. — Battle of Ste. Foy. — Retreat of the English. — Lévis besieges Quebec. — Spirit of the Garrison. — Peril of their Situation. — Relief. — Quebec saved. — Retreat of Lévis. — The News in England	327
---	-----

CHAPTER XXX.

1760.

FALL OF CANADA.

PAGE

Desperate Situation. — Efforts of Vaudreuil and Lévis. — Plans of Amherst. — A Triple Attack. — Advance of Murray. — Advance of Haviland. — Advance of Amherst. — Capitulation of Montreal. — Protest of Lévis. — Injustice of Louis XV. — Joy in the British Colonies. — Character of the War	360
--	-----

CHAPTER XXXI.

1758-1763.

THE PEACE OF PARIS

Exodus of Canadian Leaders. — Wreck of the "Auguste." — Trial of Bigot and his Confederates. — Frederic of Prussia. — His Triumphs. — His Reverses. — His Peril. — His Fortitude. — Death of George II. — Change of Policy. — Choiseul. — His Overtures of Peace. — The Family Compact. — Fall of Pitt. — Death of the Czarina. — Frederic saved. — War with Spain. — Capture of Havana. — Negotiations. — Terms of Peace. — Shall Canada be restored? — Speech of Pitt. — The Treaty signed. — End of the Seven Years War	383
--	-----

CHAPTER XXXII.

1763-1884.

CONCLUSION.

Results of the War. — Germany. — France. — England. — Canada. — The British Provinces	408
---	-----

APPENDIX	417
--------------------	-----

INDEX	445
-----------------	-----

MONTCALM AND WOLFE.

CHAPTER XVI.

1757, 1758.

A WINTER OF DISCONTENT.

BOASTS OF LOUDON.—A MUTINOUS MILITIA.—PANIC.—ACCUSATIONS OF VAUDREUIL.—HIS WEAKNESS.—INDIAN BARBARITIES.—DESTRUCTION OF GERMAN FLATS.—DISCONTENT OF MONTCALM.—FESTIVITIES AT MONTREAL.—MONTCALM'S RELATIONS WITH THE GOVERNOR.—FAMINE.—RIOTS.—MUTINY.—WINTER AT TICONDEROGA.—A DESPERATE BUSH-FIGHT.—DEFEAT OF THE RANGERS.—ADVENTURES OF ROCHE AND PRINGLE.

LOUDON, on his way back from Halifax, was at sea off the coast of Nova Scotia when a despatch-boat from Governor Pownall of Massachusetts startled him with news that Fort William Henry was attacked; and a few days after he learned by another boat that the fort was taken and the capitulation "inhumanly and villanously broken." On this he sent Webb orders to hold the enemy in check without risking a battle till he should himself arrive. "I am on the way," these were his words, "with a force sufficient to turn the scale, with God's assistance; and then I hope we shall teach the French to comply with the laws of nature and humanity. For although I abhor barbarity, the knowledge I have of Mr. Vaudreuil's behavior when in Louisiana, from his own letters in my possession, and the murders committed at Oswego and now at Fort William Henry, will oblige me to make those gentlemen sick of such inhuman villany whenever it is in my power." He reached New York on the last day of August, and heard that the French had withdrawn. He nevertheless sent his troops up the Hudson, thinking, he says, that he might still attack Ticonderoga; a wild scheme, which he soon abandoned, if he ever seriously entertained it.¹

Webb had remained at Fort Edward in mortal dread of attack. Johnson had joined him with a band of Mohawks; and on the day when Fort William Henry surrendered there had been some talk of attempting to throw succors into it by night. Then came the news of its capture; and now, when it was too late, tumultuous mobs of militia came pouring in from the neighboring provinces. In a few days thousands of them were bivouacked on the fields about Fort Edward, doing nothing, disgusted and mutinous, declaring that they were ready to fight, but not to lie still without tents, blankets, or kettles. Webb writes on the fourteenth that most of those from New York had deserted, threatening to kill their officers if they tried to stop them. Delancey ordered them to be fired upon. A sergeant was shot, others were put in arrest, and all was disorder till the seventeenth; when Webb, learning that the French were gone, sent them back to their homes.¹

¹ Loudon to Webb, 20 Aug. 1757. Loudon to Holderness, Oct. 1757. Loudon to Pownall, 16 [18?] Aug. 1757. A passage in this last letter, in which Loudon says that he shall, if prevented by head-winds from getting into New York, disembark the troops on Long Island, is perverted by that ardent partisan, William Smith, the historian of New York, into the absurd declaration "that he should encamp on Long Island for the defence of the continent."

Close on the fall of Fort William Henry came crazy rumors of disaster, running like wildfire through the colonies. The number and ferocity of the enemy were grossly exaggerated; there was a cry that they would seize Albany and New York itself;² while it was reported that Webb, as much frightened as the rest, was for retreating to the Highlands of the Hudson.³ This was the day after the capitulation, when a part only of the militia had yet appeared. If Montcalm had seized the moment, and marched that afternoon to Fort Edward, it is not impossible that in the confusion he might have carried it by a coup-de-main.

Here was an opportunity for Vaudreuil, and he did not fail to use it. Jealous of his rival's exploit, he spared no pains to tarnish it; complaining that Montcalm had stopped half way on the road to success, and, instead of following his instructions, had contented himself with one victory when he should have gained two. But the Governor had enjoined upon him as a matter of the last necessity that the Canadians should be at their homes before September to gather the crops, and he would have been the first to complain had the injunction been disregarded. To besiege Fort Edward was impossible, as Montcalm had no means of transporting cannon thither; and to attack Webb without them was a risk which he had not the rashness to incur.

¹ Delancey to [Holderness?], 24 Aug. 1757.

² Captain Christie to Governor Wentworth, 11 Aug. 1757. Ibid., to Governor Pownall, same date.

³ Smith, Hist. N. Y., Part II. 254.

It was Bougainville who first brought Vaudreuil the news of the success on Lake George. A day or two after his arrival, the Indians, who had left the army after the massacre, appeared at Montreal, bringing about two hundred English prisoners. The Governor rebuked them for breaking the capitulation, on which the heathen savages of the West declared that it was not their fault, but that of the converted Indians, who, in fact, had first raised the war-whoop. Some of the prisoners were presently bought from them at the price of two kegs of brandy each; and the inevitable consequences followed.

"I thought," writes Bougainville, "that the Governor would have told them they should have neither provisions nor presents till all the English were given up; that he himself would have gone to their huts and taken the prisoners from them; and that the inhabitants would be forbidden, under the severest penalties, from selling or giving them brandy. I saw the contrary; and my soul shuddered at the sights my eyes beheld. On the fifteenth, at two o'clock, in the presence of the whole town, they killed one of the prisoners, put him into the kettle, and forced his wretched countrymen to eat of him." The Intendant Bigot, the friend of the Governor, confirms this story; and another French writer says that they "compelled mothers to eat the flesh of their children."¹ Bigot declares that guns, canoes, and other presents were given to the Western tribes before they left Montreal; and he adds, "they must be sent home satisfied at any cost." Such were the pains taken to preserve allies who were useful chiefly through the terror inspired by their diabolical cruelties. This time their ferocity cost them dear. They had dug up and scalped the corpses in the graveyard of Fort William Henry, many of which were remains of victims of the small-pox; and the savages caught the disease, which is said to have made great havoc among them.²

Vaudreuil, in reporting what he calls "my capture of Fort William Henry," takes great credit to himself for his "generous procedures" towards the English prisoners; alluding, it seems, to his having bought some of them from the Indians with the brandy which was sure to cause the murder of others.³ His obsequiousness to his red allies did not cease with permitting them to kill and devour before his eyes those whom he was bound in honor and duty to protect. "He let ¹ "En chemin faisant et même en entrant à Montréal ils les ont mangés et fait manger aux autres prisonniers." Bigot au Ministre, 24 Août, 1757.

"Des sauvages ont fait manger aux mères la chair de leurs enfants." Jugement impartial sur les Opérations militaires en Canada. A French diary kept in Canada at this time, and captured at sea, is cited by Hutchinson as containing similar statements.

² One of these corpses was that of Richard Rogers, brother of the noted partisan Robert Rogers. He had died of small-pox some time before. Rogers, Journals, 55, note.

³ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 15 Sept. 1757.

them do what they pleased," says a French contemporary; "they were seen roaming about Montreal, knife in hand, threatening everybody, and often insulting those they met. When complaint was made, he said nothing. Far from it; instead of reproaching them, he loaded them with gifts, in the belief that their cruelty would then relent."¹

Nevertheless, in about a fortnight all, or nearly all, the surviving prisoners were bought out of their clutches; and then, after a final distribution of presents and a grand debauch at La Chine, the whole savage rout paddled for their villages.

The campaign closed in November with a partisan exploit on the Mohawk. Here, at a place called German Flats, on the farthest frontier, there was a thriving settlement of German peasants from the Palatinate, who were so ill-disposed towards the English that Vaudreuil had had good hope of stirring them to revolt, while at the same time persuading their neighbors, the Oneida Indians, to take part with France.² As his measures to this end failed, he resolved to attack them. Therefore, at three o'clock in the morning of the twelfth of November, three hundred colony troops, Canadians and Indians, 'under an officer named Belêtre, wakened the unhappy peasants by a burst of yells, and attacked the small picket forts which they had built as places of refuge. These were taken one by one and set on fire. The sixty dwellings of the settlement, with their barns and outhouses, were all burned, forty or fifty of the inhabitants were killed, and about three times that number, chiefly women and children, were made prisoners, including Johan Jost Petrie, the magistrate of the place. Fort Herkimer was not far off, with a garrison of two hundred men under Captain Townshend, who at the first alarm sent out a detachment too weak to arrest the havoc; while Belêtre, unable to carry off his booty, set on his followers to the work of destruction, killed a great number of hogs, sheep, cattle, and horses, and then made a hasty retreat. Lord Howe, pushing up the river from Schenectady with troops and militia, found nothing but an abandoned slaughter-field. Vaudreuil reported the affair to the Court, and summed up the results with pompous egotism: "I have ruined the plans of the English; I have disposed the Five Nations to attack them; I have carried consternation and terror into all those parts."¹

¹ Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760.

² Dépêches de Vaudreuil, 1757.

Montcalm, his summer work over, went to Montreal; and thence in September to Quebec, a place more to his liking. "Come as soon as you can," he wrote to Bourlamaque, "and I will tell a certain fair lady how eager you are." Even Quebec was no paradise for him; and he writes again to the same friend: "My heart and my stomach are both ill at ease, the latter being the worse." To his wife he says: "The price of everything is rising. I am ruining myself; I owe the treasurer twelve thousand francs. I long for peace and for you. In spite of the public distress, we have balls and furious gambling." In February he returned to Montreal in a sleigh on the ice of the St. Lawrence, — a mode of travelling which he describes as cold but delicious. Montreal pleased him less than ever, especially as he was not in favor at what he calls the Court, meaning the circle of the Governor-General. "I find this place so amusing," he writes ironically to Bourlamaque, "that I wish Holy Week could be lengthened, to give me a pretext for neither making nor receiving visits, staying at home, and dining there almost alone. Burn all my letters, as I do yours." And in the next week: "Lent and devotion have upset my stomach and given me a cold; which does not prevent me from having the Governor-General at dinner to-day to end his lenten fast, according to custom here." Two days after he announces: "To-day a grand dinner at Martel's; twenty-three persons, all big-wigs (les grosses perruques); no ladies. We still have got to undergo those of Péan, Deschambault, and the Chevalier de Lévis. I spend almost every evening in my chamber, the place I like best, and where I am least bored."

¹ Loudon to Pitt, 14 Feb. 1758. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 12 Fév. 1758. Ibid., 28 Nov. 1758. Bougainville, Journal. Summary of M. de Belêtre's Campaign, in N. Y. Col. Docs., X. 672. Extravagant reports of the havoc made were sent to France. It was pretended that three thousand cattle, three thousand sheep (Vaudreuil says four thousand), and from five hundred to fifteen hundred horses were destroyed, with other personal property to the amount of 1,500,000 livres. These official falsehoods are contradicted in a letter from Quebec, Daine au Maréchal de Belleisle, 19 Mai, 1758. Lévis says that the whole population of the settlement, men, women, and children, was not above three hundred.

With the opening spring there were changes in the modes of amusement. Picnics began, Vaudreuil and his wife being often of the party, as too was Lévis. The Governor also made visits of compliment at the houses of the seigniorial proprietors along the river; "very much," says Montcalm, as "Henri IV. did to the bourgeois notables of Paris. I live as usual, fencing in the morning, dining, and passing the evening at home or at the Governor's. Péan has gone up to La Chine to spend six days with the reigning sultana [Péan's wife, mistress of Bigot]. As for me, my ennui increases. I don't know what to do, or say, or read, or where to go; and I think that at the end of the next campaign I shall ask bluntly, blindly, for my recall, only because I am bored."¹

His relations with Vaudreuil were a constant annoyance to him, notwithstanding the mask of mutual civility. "I never," he tells his mother, "ask for a place in the colony troops for anybody. You need not be an Œdipus to guess this riddle. Here are four lines from Corneille:—

"*Mon crime véritable est d'avoir aujourd'hui
Plus de nom que . . . [Vaudreuil], plus de vertus que lui,
Et c'est de là que part cette secrète haine
Que le temps ne rendra que plus forte et plus pleine.*"

Nevertheless I live here on good terms with everybody, and do my best to serve the King. If they could but do without me; if they could but spring some trap on me, or if I should happen to meet with some check!"

¹ Montcalm à Bourlamaque, 22 Mai, 1758.

Vaudreuil meanwhile had written to the Court in high praise of Lévis, hinting that he, and not Montcalm, ought to have the chief command.¹

Under the hollow gayeties of the ruling class lay a great public distress, which broke at last into riot. Towards midwinter no flour was to be had in Montreal; and both soldiers and people were required to accept a reduced ration, partly of horse-flesh. A mob gathered before the Governor's house, and a deputation of women beset him, crying out that the horse was the friend of man, and that religion forbade him to be eaten. In reply he threatened them with imprisonment and hanging; but with little effect, and the crowd dispersed, only to stir up the soldiers quartered in the houses of the town. The colony regulars, ill-disciplined at the best, broke into mutiny, and excited the battalion of Béarn to join them. Vaudreuil was helpless; Montcalm was in Quebec; and the task of dealing with the mutineers fell upon Lévis, who proved equal to the crisis, took a high tone, threatened death to the first soldier who should refuse horse-flesh, assured them at the same time that he ate it every day himself, and by a characteristic mingling of authority and tact, quelled the storm.²

The prospects of the next campaign began to open. Captain Pouchot had written from Niagara that three thousand savages were waiting to be let loose against the English borders. "What a scourge!" exclaims Bougainville. "Humanity groans at being forced to use such monsters. What can be done against an invisible enemy, who strikes and vanishes, swift as the lightning? It is the destroying angel." Captain Hebecourt kept watch and ward at Ticonderoga, begirt with snow and ice, and much plagued by English rangers, who sometimes got into the ditch itself.¹ This was to reconnoitre the place in preparation for a winter attack which Loudon had planned, but which, like the rest of his schemes, fell to the ground.² Towards midwinter a band of these intruders captured two soldiers and butchered some fifteen cattle close to the fort, leaving tied to the horns of one of them a note addressed to the commandant in these terms: "I am obliged to you, sir, for the rest you have allowed me to take and the fresh meat you have sent me. I shall take good care of my prisoners. My compliments to the Marquis of Montcalm." Signed, Rogers.³

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre de la Marine, 16 Sept. 1757. Ibid., au Ministre de la Guerre, même date.

² Bougainville, Journal. Montcalm à Mirepoix, 20 Avril, 1758. Lévis, Journal de la Guerre du Canada.

A few weeks later Hebecourt had his revenge. About the middle of March a report came to Montreal that a large party of rangers had been cut to pieces a few miles from Ticonderoga, and that Rogers himself was among the slain. This last announcement proved false; but the rangers had suffered a crushing defeat. Colonel Haviland, commanding at Fort Edward, sent a hundred and eighty of them, men and officers, on a scouting party towards Ticonderoga; and Captain Pringle and Lieutenant Roche, of the twenty-seventh regiment, joined them as volunteers, no doubt through a love of hardy adventure, which was destined to be fully satisfied. Rogers commanded the whole. They passed down Lake George on the ice under cover of night, and then, as they neared the French outposts, pursued their way by land behind Rogers Rock and the other mountains of the western shore. On the preceding day, the twelfth of March, Hebecourt had received a reinforcement of two hundred Mission Indians and a body of Canadians. The Indians had no sooner arrived than, though nominally Christians, they consulted the spirits, by whom they were told that the English were coming. On this they sent out scouts, who came back breathless, declaring that they had found a great number of snow-shoe tracks. The superhuman warning being thus confirmed, the whole body of Indians, joined by a band of Canadians and a number of volunteers from the regulars, set out to meet the approaching enemy, and took their way up the valley of Trout Brook, a mountain gorge that opens from the west upon the valley of Ticonderoga.

¹ Montcalm à Bourlamaque, 28 Mars, 1758.

² Loudon to Pitt, 14 Feb. 1758.

³ Journal de ce qui s'est passé en Canada, 1757, 1758. Compare Rogers, Journals, 72-75.

Towards three o'clock on the afternoon of that day Rogers had reached a point nearly west of the mountain that bears his name. The rough and rocky ground was buried four feet in snow, and all around stood the gray trunks of the forest, bearing aloft their skeleton arms and tangled intricacy of leafless twigs. Close on the right was a steep hill, and at a little distance on the left was the brook, lost under ice and snow. A scout from the front told Rogers that a party of Indians was approaching along the bed of the frozen stream, on which he ordered his men to halt, face to that side, and advance cautiously. The Indians soon appeared, and received a fire that killed some of them and drove back the rest in confusion.

Not suspecting that they were but an advance-guard, about half the rangers dashed in pursuit, and were soon met by the whole body of the enemy. The woods rang with yells and musketry. In a few minutes some fifty of the pursuers were shot down, and the rest driven back in disorder upon their comrades. Rogers formed them all on the slope of the hill; and here they fought till sunset with stubborn desperation, twice repulsing the overwhelming numbers of the assailants, and thwarting all their efforts to gain the heights in the rear. The combatants were often not twenty yards apart, and sometimes they were mixed together. At length a large body of Indians succeeded in turning the right flank of the rangers. Lieutenant Phillips and a few men were sent by Rogers to oppose the movement; but they quickly found themselves surrounded, and after a brave defence surrendered on a pledge of good treatment. Rogers now advised the volunteers, Pringle and Roche, to escape while there was time, and offered them a sergeant as guide; but they gallantly resolved to stand by him. Eight officers and more than a hundred rangers lay dead and wounded in the snow. Evening was near and the forest was darkening fast, when the few survivors broke and fled. Rogers with about twenty followers escaped up the mountain; and gathering others about him, made a running fight against the Indian pursuers, reached Lake George, not without fresh losses, and after two days of misery regained Fort Edward with the remnant of his band. The enemy on their part suffered heavily, the chief loss falling on the Indians; who, to revenge themselves, murdered all the wounded and nearly all the prisoners, and tying Lieutenant Phillips and his men to trees, hacked them to pieces.

Captain Pringle and Lieutenant Roche had become separated from the other fugitives; and, ignorant of woodcraft, they wandered by moonlight amid the desolation of rocks and snow, till early in the night they met a man whom they knew as a servant of Rogers, and who said that he could guide them to Fort Edward. One of them had lost his snow-shoes in the fight; and, crouching over a miserable fire of broken sticks, they worked till morning to make a kind of substitute with forked branches, twigs, and a few leather strings. They had no hatchet to cut firewood, no blankets, no overcoats, and no food except part of a Bologna sausage and a little ginger which Pringle had brought with him. There was no game; not even a squirrel was astir; and their chief sustenance was juniper-berries and the inner bark of trees. But their worst calamity was the helplessness of their guide. His brain wandered; and while always insisting that he knew the country well, he led them during four days hither and thither among a labyrinth of nameless mountains, clambering over rocks, wading through snowdrifts, struggling among fallen trees, till on the fifth day they saw with despair that they had circled back to their own starting-point. On the next morning, when they were on the ice of Lake George, not far from Rogers Rock, a blinding storm of sleet and snow drove in their faces. Spent as they were, it was death to stop; and bending their heads against the blast, they fought their way forward, now on the ice, and now in the adjacent forest, till in the afternoon the storm ceased, and they found themselves on the bank of an unknown stream. It was the outlet of the lake; for they had wandered into the valley of Ticonderoga, and were not three miles from the French fort. In crossing the torrent Pringle lost his gun, and was near losing his life. All three of the party were drenched to the skin; and, becoming now for the first time aware of where they were, they resolved on yielding themselves prisoners to save their lives. Night, however, again found them in the forest. Their guide became delirious, saw visions of Indians all around, and, murmuring incoherently, straggled off a little way, seated himself in the snow, and was soon dead. The two officers, themselves but half alive, walked all night round a tree to keep the blood in motion. In the morning, again toiling on, they presently saw the fort across the intervening snow-fields, and approached it, waving a white handkerchief. Several French officers dashed towards them at full speed, and reached them in time to save them from the clutches of the Indians, whose camps were near at hand. They were kindly treated, recovered from the effects of their frightful ordeal, and were afterwards exchanged. Pringle lived to old age, and died in 1800, senior major-general of the British army.¹

¹ Rogers, two days after reaching Fort Edward, made a detailed report of the fight, which was printed in the New Hampshire Gazette and other provincial papers. It is substantially incorporated in his published Journals, which also contain a long letter from Pringle to Colonel Haviland, dated at Carillon (Ticonderoga), 28 March, and giving an excellent account of his and Roche's adventures. It was sent by a flag of truce, which soon after arrived from Fort Edward with a letter for Vaudreuil. The French accounts of the fight are Hebecourt à [Vaudreuil ?], 15 Mars, 1758. Montcalm au Ministre de la Guerre, 10 Avril, 1758. Doreil à Belleisle, 30 Avril, 1758. Bougainville, Journal. Relation de l'Affaire de Roger, 19 Mars, 1758. Autre Relation, même date. Lévis, Journal. According to Lévis, the French force consisted of 250 Indians and Canadians, and a number of officers, cadets, and soldiers. Roger puts it at 700. Most of the French writers put the force of the rangers, correctly, at about 180. Rogers reports his loss at 125. None of the wounded seem to have escaped, being either murdered after the fight, or killed by exposure in the woods. The Indians brought in 144 scalps, having no doubt divided some of them, after their ingenious custom. Rogers threw off his overcoat during the fight, and it was found on the field, with his commission in the pocket; whence the report of his death. There is an unsupported tradition that he escaped by sliding on his snow-shoes down a precipice of Rogers Rock.

CHAPTER XVII.

1753-1760.

BIGOT.

HIS LIFE AND CHARACTER. — CANADIAN SOCIETY. — OFFICIAL FESTIVITIES. — A PARTY OF PLEASURE. — HOSPITALITIES OF BIGOT. — DESPERATE GAMBLING. — CHÂTEAU BIGOT. — CANADIAN LADIES. — CADET. — LA FRIPONNE. — OFFICIAL RASCALITY. — METHODS OF PECULATION. — CRUEL FRAUDS ON THE ACADIANS. — MILITARY CORRUPTION. — PÉAN. — LOVE AND KNAVERY. — VARIN AND HIS PARTNERS. — VAUDREUIL AND THE PECULATORS. — HE DEFENDS BIGOT; PRAISES CADET AND PÉAN. — CANADIAN FINANCES. — PERIL OF BIGOT. — THREATS OF THE MINISTER. — EVIDENCE OF MONTCALM. — IMPENDING RUIN OF THE CONFEDERATES.

AT this stormy epoch of Canadian history the sinister figure of the Intendant Bigot moves conspicuous on the scene. Not that he was answerable for all the manifold corruption that infected the colony, for much of it was rife before his time, and had a vitality of its own; but his office and character made him the centre of it, and, more than any other man, he marshalled and organized the forces of knavery.

In the dual government of Canada the Governor represented the King and commanded the troops; while the Intendant was charged with trade, finance, justice, and all other departments of civil administration.¹ In former times the two functionaries usually quarrelled ; but between Vaudreuil and Bigot there was perfect harmony.

¹ See Old Régime in Canada.

François Bigot, in the words of his biographer, was "born in the bosom of the magistracy," both his father and his grandfather having held honorable positions in the parliament of Bordeaux.¹ In appearance he was not prepossessing, though his ugly, pimpled face was joined with easy and agreeable manners. In spite of indifferent health, he was untiring both in pleasure and in work, a skilful man of business, of great official experience, energetic, good-natured, free-handed, ready to oblige his friends and aid them in their needs at the expense of the King, his master ; fond of social enjoyments, lavish in hospitality.

A year or two before the war began, the engineer Franquet was sent from France to strengthen Louisbourg and inspect the defences of Canada. He kept a copious journal, full of curious observation, and affording bright glimpses not only of the social life of the Intendant, but of Canadian society in the upper or official class. Thus, among various matters of the kind, he gives us the following. Bigot, who was in Quebec, had occasion to go to Montreal to meet the Governor ; and this official journey was turned into a pleasure excursion, of which the King paid all the costs. Those favored with invitations, a privilege highly prized, were Franquet, with seven or eight military officers and a corresponding number of ladies, including the wife of Major Péan, of whom Bigot was enamoured. A chief steward, cooks, servants, and other attendants, followed the party. The guests had been requested to send their portmanteaus to the Intendant's Palace six days before, that they might be sent forward on sledges along with bedding, table service, cooking utensils, and numberless articles of comfort and luxury. Orders were given to the inhabitants along the way, on pain of imprisonment, to level the snowdrifts and beat the road smooth with ox-teams, as also to provide relays of horses. It is true that they were well paid for this last service; so well that the hire of a horse to Montreal and back again would cost the King the entire value of the animal. On the eighth of February the party met at the palace; and after a grand dinner set out upon their journey in twenty or more sleighs, some with two guests and a driver, and the rest with servants and attendants. The procession passed at full trot along St. Vallier street amid the shouts of an admiring crowd, stopped towards night at Pointe-aux-Trembles, where each looked for lodging; and then they all met and supped with the Intendant. The militia captain of the place was ordered to have fresh horses ready at seven in the morning, when Bigot regaled his friends with tea, coffee, and chocolate, after which they set out again, drove to Cap-Santé, and stopped two hours at the house of the militia captain to breakfast and warm themselves. In the afternoon they reached Ste. Anne-de-la-Pérade, when Bigot gave them a supper at the house in which he lodged, and they spent the evening at cards.

¹ Procès de Bigot, Cadet, et autres, Mémoire pour Messire François Bigot, accusé, contre Monsieur le Procureur-Général du Roi, accusateur.

The next morning brought them to Three Rivers, where Madame Marin, Franquet's travelling companion, wanted to stop to see her sister, the wife of Rigaud, who was then governor of the place. Madame de Rigaud, being ill, received her visitors in bed, and ordered an ample dinner to be provided for them; after which they returned to her chamber for coffee and conversation. Then they all set out again, saluted by the cannon of the fort.

Their next stopping-place was Isle-au-Castor, where, being seated at cards before supper, they were agreeably surprised by the appearance of the Governor, who had come down from Montreal to meet them with four officers, Duchesnaye, Marin, Le Mercier, and Péan. Many were the embraces and compliments; and in the morning they all journeyed on together, stopping towards night at the largest house they could find, where their servants took away the partitions to make room, and they sat down to a supper, followed by the inevitable game of cards. On the next night they reached Montreal and were lodged at the intendency, the official residence of the hospitable Bigot. The succeeding day was spent in visiting persons of eminence and consideration, among whom are to be noted the names, soon to become notorious, of Varin, naval commissary, Martel, King's store-keeper, Antoine Penisseault, and François Maurin. A succession of festivities followed, including the benediction of three flags for a band of militia on their way to the Ohio. All persons of quality in Montreal were invited on this occasion, and the Governor gave them a dinner and a supper. Bigot, however, outdid him in the plenitude of his hospitality, since, in the week before Lent, forty guests supped every evening at his table, and dances, masquerades, and cards consumed the night.¹

His chief abode was at Quebec, in the capacious but somewhat ugly building known as the Intendant's Palace. Here it was his custom during the war to entertain twenty persons at dinner every day; and there was also a hall for dancing, with a gallery to which the citizens were admitted as spectators.² The bounteous Intendant provided a separate dancing-hall for the populace; and, though at the same time he plundered and ruined them, his gracious demeanor long kept him a place in their hearts. Gambling was the chief feature of his entertainments, and the stakes grew deeper as the war went on. He played desperately himself, and early in 1758 lost two hundred and four thousand francs, — a loss which he well knew how to repair. Besides his official residence on the banks of the St. Charles, he had a country house about five miles distant, a massive old stone building in the woods at the foot of the mountain of Charlebourg; its ruins are now known as Château Bigot. In its day it was called the Hermitage; though the uses to which it was applied savored nothing of asceticism. Tradition connects it and its owner with a romantic, but more than doubtful, story of love, jealousy, and murder.

¹ Franquet, Journal.

² De Gaspé, Mémoires, 119.

The chief Canadian families were so social in their habits and so connected by intermarriage that, along with the French civil and military officers of the colonial establishment, they formed a society whose members all knew each other, like the corresponding class in Virginia. There was among them a social facility and ease rare in democratic communities; and in the ladies of Quebec and Montreal were often seen graces which visitors from France were astonished to find at the edge of a wilderness. Yet this small though lively society had anomalies which grew more obtrusive towards the close of the war. Knavery makes strange companions; and at the tables of high civil officials and colony officers of rank sat guests as boorish in manners as they were worthless in character.

Foremost among these was Joseph Cadet, son of a butcher at Quebec, who at thirteen went to sea as a pilot's boy, then kept the cows of an inhabitant of Charlebourg, and at last took up his father's trade and prospered in it.¹ In 1756 Bigot got him appointed commissary-general, and made a contract with him which flung wide open the doors of peculation. In the next two years Cadet and his associates, Péan, Maurin, Corpron, and

¹ Procès de Bigot, Cadet, et autres, Mémoire pour Messire François Bigot. Compare Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760.

Penisseault, sold to the King, for about twenty-three million francs, provisions which cost them eleven millions, leaving a net profit of about twelve millions. It was not legally proved that the Intendant shared Cadet's gains; but there is no reasonable doubt that he did so. Bigot's chief profits rose, however, from other sources. It was his business to see that the King's storehouses for the supply of troops, militia, and Indians were kept well stocked. To this end he and Bréard, naval comptroller at Quebec, made a partnership with the commercial house of Gradis and Son at Bordeaux. He next told the Colonial Minister that there were stores enough already in Canada to last three years, and that it would be more to the advantage of the King to buy them in the colony than to take the risk of sending them from France.¹ Gradis and Son then shipped them to Canada in large quantities, while Bréard or his agent declared at the custom-house that they belonged to the King, and so escaped the payment of duties. They were then, as occasion rose, sold to the King at a huge profit, always under fictitious names. Often they were sold to some favored merchant or speculator, who sold them in turn to Bigot's confederate, the King's storekeeper; and sometimes they passed through several successive hands, till the price rose to double or triple the first cost, the Intendant and his partners sharing the gains with friends and allies. They would let nobody else sell to the King; and thus a grinding monopoly was established, to the great profit of those who held it.¹

¹ Bigot au Ministre, 8 Oct. 1749.

Under the name of a trader named Claverie, Bigot, some time before the war, set up a warehouse on land belonging to the King and not far from his own palace. Here the goods shipped from Bordeaux were collected, to be sold in retail to the citizens, and in wholesale to favored merchants and the King. This establishment was popularly known as La Friponne, or The Cheat. There was another Friponne at Montreal, which was leagued with that of Quebec, and received goods from it.

Bigot and his accomplices invented many other profitable frauds. Thus he was charged with the disposal of the large quantity of furs belonging to his master, which it was his duty to sell at public auction, after due notice, to the highest bidder. Instead of this, he sold them privately at a low price to his own confederates. It was also his duty to provide transportation for troops, artillery, provisions, and stores, in which he made good profit by letting to the King, at high prices, boats or vessels which he had himself bought or hired for the purpose.²

Yet these and other illicit gains still left him but the second place as public plunderer. Cadet, the commissary-general, reaped an ampler harvest, and became the richest man in the colony. One of the operations of this scoundrel, accomplished with the help of Bigot, consisted in buying for six hundred thousand francs a quantity of stores belonging to the King, and then selling them back to him for one million four hundred thousand.¹ It was further shown on his trial that in 1759 he received 1,614,354 francs for stores furnished at the post of Miramichi, while the value of those actually furnished was but 889,544 francs; thus giving him a fraudulent profit of more than seven hundred and twenty-four thousand.² Cadet's chief resource was the falsification of accounts. The service of the King in Canada was fenced about by rigid formalities. When supplies were wanted at any of the military posts, the commandant made a requisition specifying their nature and quantity, while, before pay could be drawn for them, the King's storekeeper, the local commissary, and the inspector must set their names as vouchers to the list, and finally Bigot must sign it.³ But precautions were useless where all were leagued to rob the King. It appeared on Cadet's trial that by gifts of wine, brandy, or money he had bribed the officers, both civil and military, at all the principal forts to attest the truth of accounts in which the supplies furnished by him were set at more than twice their true amount. Of the many frauds charged against him there was one peculiarly odious. Large numbers of refugee Acadians were to be supplied with rations to keep them alive. Instead of wholesome food, mouldered and unsalable salt cod was sent them, and paid for by the King at inordinate prices.¹ It was but one of many heartless outrages practised by Canadian officials on this unhappy people.

¹ Procès de Bigot, Cadet, et autres. Mémoire sur les Fraudes commises dans la Colonie. Compare Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760.

² Jugement rendu souverainement dans l’Affaire du Canada.

¹ Procès de Bigot, Cadet, et autres, Requête du Procureur-Général, 19 Dec. 1761.

² Procès de Bigot, Cadet, et autres, Mémoire pour Messire François Bigot.

³ Mémoire sur le Canada (Archives Nationales).

Cadet told the Intendant that the inhabitants were hoarding their grain, and got an order from him requiring them to sell it at a low fixed price, on pain of having it seized. Thus nearly the whole fell into his hands. Famine ensued; and he then sold it at a great profit, partly to the King, and partly to its first owners. Another of his devices was to sell provisions to the King which, being sent to the outlying forts, were falsely reported as consumed; on which he sold them to the King a second time. Not without reason does a writer of the time exclaim: "This is the land of abuses, ignorance, prejudice, and all that is monstrous in government. Peculation, monopoly, and plunder have become a bottomless abyss."²

The command of a fort brought such opportunities of making money that, according to Bougainville, the mere prospect of appointment to it for the usual term of three years was thought enough for a young man to marry upon. It was a favor in the gift of the Governor, who was accused of sharing the profits. These came partly from the fur-trade, and still more from frauds of various kinds. For example, a requisition was made for supplies as gifts to the Indians in order to keep them friendly or send them on the war-path; and their number was put many times above the truth in order to get more goods, which the commandant and his confederates then bartered for furs on their own account, instead of giving them as presents. "And," says a contemporary, addressing the Colonial Minister, "those who treat the savages so basely are officers of the King, depositaries of his authority, ministers of that Great Onontio whom they call their father."¹ At the post of Green Bay, the partisan officer Marin, and Rigaud, the Governor's brother, made in a short time a profit of three hundred and twelve thousand francs.² "Why is it," asks Bougainville, "that of all which the King sends to the Indians two thirds are stolen, and the rest sold to them instead of being given?"³

¹ Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760.

² Considérations sur l'État présent du Canada.

The transportation of military stores gave another opportunity of plunder. The contractor would procure from the Governor or the local commandant an order requiring the inhabitants to serve him as boatmen, drivers, or porters, under a promise of exemption that year from duty as soldiers. This saved him his chief item of expense, and the profits of his contract rose in proportion.

¹ Considérations sur l'État présent du Canada.

² Mémoire sur les Fraudes commises dans la Colonie. Bougainville, Mémoire sur l'État de la Nouvelle France.

³ Bougainville, Journal.

A contagion of knavery ran through the official life of the colony; and to resist it demanded no common share of moral robustness. The officers of the troops of the line were not much within its influence; but those of the militia and colony regulars, whether of French or Canadian birth, shared the corruption of the civil service. Seventeen of them, including six chevaliers of St. Louis and eight commandants of forts, were afterwards arraigned for fraud and malversation, though some of the number were acquitted. Bougainville gives the names of four other Canadian officers as honorable exceptions to the general demoralization, — Benoît, Repentigny, Lainé, and Le Borgne; “not enough,” he observes, “to save Sodom.”

Conspicuous among these military thieves was Major Péan, whose qualities as a soldier have been questioned, but who nevertheless had shown almost as much vigor in serving the King during the Ohio campaign of 1753 as he afterwards displayed effrontery in cheating him. “Le petit Péan” had married a young wife, Mademoiselle Desméloizes, Canadian like himself, well born, and famed for beauty, vivacity, and wit. Bigot, who was near sixty, became her accepted lover; and the fortune of Péan was made. His first success seems to have taken him by surprise. He had bought as a speculation a large quantity of grain, with money of the King lent him by the Intendant. Bigot, officially omnipotent, then issued an order raising the commodity to a price far above that paid by Péan, who thus made a profit of fifty thousand crowns.¹ A few years later his wealth was estimated at from two to four million francs. Madame Péan became a power in Canada, the dispenser of favors and offices; and all who sought opportunity to rob the King hastened to pay her their court. Péan, jilted by his own wife, made prosperous love to the wife of his partner, Penisseault; who, though the daughter of a Montreal tradesman, had the air of a woman of rank, and presided with dignity and grace at a hospitable board where were gathered the clerks of Cadet and other lesser lights of the administrative hierarchy. It was often honored by the presence of the Chevalier de Lévis, who, captivated by the charms of the hostess, condescended to a society which his friends condemned as unworthy of his station. He succeeded Péan in the graces of Madame Penisseault, and after the war took her with him to France; while the aggrieved husband found consolation in the wives of the small functionaries under his orders.²

Another prominent name on the roll of knavery was that of Varin, commissary of marine, and Bigot's deputy at Montreal, a Frenchman of low degree, small in stature, sharp witted, indefatigable, conceited, arrogant, headstrong, capricious, and dissolute. Worthless as he was, he found a place in the Court circle of the Governor, and aspired to supplant Bigot in the intendancy. To this end, as well as to save himself from justice, he had the fatuity to turn informer and lay bare the sins of his confederates, though forced at the same time to betray his own. Among his comrades and allies may be mentioned Deschenaux, son of a shoemaker at Quebec, and secretary to the Intendant; Martel, King's storekeeper at Montreal; the humpback Maurin, who is not to be confounded with the partisan officer Marin; and Corpron, a clerk whom several tradesmen had dismissed for rascality, but who was now in the confidence of Cadet, to whom he made himself useful, and in whose service he grew rich.

¹ Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760. Mémoire sur les Fraudes, etc. Compare Pouchot, I. 8.

² Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760.

Canada was the prey of official jackals, — true lion's providers, since they helped to prepare a way for the imperial beast, who, roused at last from his lethargy, was gathering his strength to seize her for his own. Honesty could not be expected from a body of men clothed with arbitrary and ill-defined powers, ruling with absolute sway an unfortunate people who had no voice in their own destinies, and answerable only to an apathetic master three thousand miles away. Nor did the Canadian Church, though supreme, check the corruptions that sprang up and flourished under its eye. The Governor himself was charged with sharing the plunder; and though he was acquitted on his trial, it is certain that Bigot had him well in hand, that he was intimate with the chief robbers, and that they found help in his weak compliances and wilful blindness. He put his stepson, Le Verrier, in command at Michillimackinac, where, by fraud and the connivance of his stepfather, the young man made a fortune.¹ When the Colonial Minister berated the Intendant for maladministration, Vaudreuil became his advocate, and wrote thus in his defence: "I cannot conceal from you, Monseigneur, how deeply M. Bigot feels the suspicions expressed in your letters to him. He does not deserve them, I am sure. He is full of zeal for the service of the King; but as he is rich, or passes as such, and as he has merit, the ill-disposed are jealous, and insinuate that he has prospered at the expense of His Majesty. I am certain that it is not true, and that nobody is a better citizen than he, or has the King's interest more at heart."² For Cadet, the butcher's son, the Governor asked a patent of nobility as a reward for his services.³ When Péan went to France in 1758, Vaudreuil wrote to the Colonial Minister: "I have great confidence in him. He knows the colony and its needs. You can trust all he says. He will explain everything in the best manner. I shall be extremely sensible to any kindness you may show him, and hope that when you know him you will like him as much as I do."⁴

Administrative corruption was not the only bane of Canada. Her financial condition was desperate. The ordinary circulating medium consisted of what was known as card money, and amounted to only

¹ Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760.

² Vaudreuil au Ministre, 15 Oct. 1759.

³ Ibid., 7 Nov. 1759.

⁴ Ibid., 6 Août, 1758.

a million of francs. This being insufficient, Bigot, like his predecessor Hocquart, issued promissory notes on his own authority, and made them legal tender. They were for sums from one franc to a hundred, and were called ordonnances. Their issue was blamed at Versailles as an encroachment on the royal prerogative, though they were recognized by the Ministry in view of the necessity of the case. Every autumn those who held them to any considerable amount might bring them to the colonial treasurer, who gave in return bills of exchange on the royal treasury in France. At first these bills were promptly paid; then delays took place, and the notes depreciated; till in 1759 the Ministry, aghast at the amount, refused payment, and the utmost dismay and confusion followed.¹

The vast jarring, discordant mechanism of corruption grew incontrollable; it seized upon Bigot, and dragged him, despite himself, into perils which his prudence would have shunned. He was becoming a victim to the rapacity of his own confederates, whom he dared not offend by refusing his connivance and his signature to frauds which became more and more recklessly audacious. He asked leave to retire from office, in the hope that his successor would bear the brunt of the ministerial displeasure. Péan had withdrawn already, and with the fruits of his plunder bought land in

¹ Réflexions sommaires sur le Commerce qui s'est fait en Canada. État présent du Canada. Compare Stevenson, Card Money of Canada, in Transactions of the Historical Society of Quebec, 1873-1875.

France, where he thought himself safe. But though the Intendant had long been an object of distrust, and had often been warned to mend his ways,¹ yet such was his energy, his executive power, and his fertility of resource, that in the crisis of the war it was hard to dispense with him. Neither his abilities, however, nor his strong connections in France, nor an ally whom he had secured in the bureau of the Colonial Minister himself, could avail him much longer; and the letters from Versailles became appalling in rebuke and menace.

“The ship ‘Britannia,’” wrote the Minister, Berryer, “laden with goods such as are wanted in the colony, was captured by a privateer from St.-Malo, and brought into Quebec. You sold the whole cargo for eight hundred thousand francs. The purchasers made a profit of two millions. You bought back a part for the King at one million, or two hundred thousand more than the price for which you sold the whole. With conduct like this it is no wonder that the expenses of the colony become insupportable. The amount of your drafts on the treasury is frightful. The fortunes of your subordinates throw suspicion on your administration.” And in another letter on the same day: “How could it happen that the small-pox among the Indians cost the King a million francs? What does this expense mean? Who is answerable for it? Is it the officers who command the posts, or is it the storekeepers?

¹ Ordres du Roy et Dépêches des Ministres, 1751-1758.

You give me no particulars. What has become of the immense quantity of provisions sent to Canada last year? I am forced to conclude that the King's stores are set down as consumed from the moment they arrive, and then sold to His Majesty at exorbitant prices. Thus the King buys stores in France, and then buys them again in Canada. I no longer wonder at the immense fortunes made in the colony."¹ Some months later the Minister writes: "You pay bills without examination, and then find an error in your accounts of three million six hundred thousand francs. In the letters from Canada I see nothing but incessant speculation in provisions and goods, which are sold to the King for ten times more than they cost in France. For the last time, I exhort you to give these things your serious attention, for they will not escape from mine."²

"I write, Monsieur, to answer your last two letters, in which you tell me that instead of sixteen millions, your drafts on the treasury for 1758 will reach twenty-four millions, and that this year they will rise to from thirty-one to thirty-three millions. It seems, then, that there are no bounds to the expenses of Canada. They double almost every year, while you seem to give yourself no concern except to get them paid. Do you suppose that I can advise the King to approve such an administration? or do you think that you can take the immense sum of thirty-three millions out of the royal treasury by merely assuring me that you have signed drafts for it? This, too, for expenses incurred irregularly, often needlessly, always wastefully ; which make the fortune of everybody who has the least hand in them, and about which you know so little that after reporting them at sixteen millions, you find two months after that they will reach twenty-four. You are accused of having given the furnishing of provisions to one man, who, under the name of commissary-general, has set what prices he pleased ; of buying for the King at second or third hand what you might have got from the producer at half the price ; of having in this and other ways made the fortunes of persons connected with you ; and of living in splendor in the midst of a public misery, which all the letters from the colony agree in ascribing to bad administration, and in charging M. de Vaudreuil with weakness in not preventing.”¹

¹ Le Ministre à Bigot, 19 Jan. 1759.

² Ibid., 29 Août, 1759.

These drastic utterances seem to have been partly due to a letter written by Montcalm in cipher to the Maréchal de Belleisle, then minister of war. It painted the deplorable condition of Canada, and exposed without reserve the speculations and robberies of those intrusted with its interests. “It seems,” said the General, “as if they were all hastening to make their fortunes before the loss of the colony ; which many of them perhaps desire as a veil to their conduct.” He gives among other cases that of Le Mercier, chief of Canadian artillery, who had come to

¹ Le Ministre à Bigot, 29 Août, 1759 (second letter of this date).

Canada as a private soldier twenty years before, and had so prospered on fraudulent contracts that he would soon be worth nearly a million. "I have often," continues Montcalm, "spoken of these expenditures to M. de Vaudreuil and M. Bigot; and each throws the blame on the other."¹ And yet at the same time Vaudreuil was assuring the Minister that Bigot was without blame.

Some two months before Montcalm wrote this letter, the Minister, Berryer, sent a despatch to the Governor and Intendant which filled them with ire and mortification. It ordered them to do nothing without consulting the general of the French regulars, not only in matters of war, but in all matters of administration touching the defence and preservation of the colony. A plainer proof of confidence on one hand and distrust on the other could not have been given.²

One Querdisien-Tremais was sent from Bordeaux as an agent of Government to make investigation. He played the part of detective, wormed himself into the secrets of the confederates, and after six months of patient inquisition traced out four distinct combinations for public plunder. Explicit orders were now given to Bigot, who, seeing no other escape, broke with Cadet, and made him disgorge two millions of stolen money. The Commissary-General and his partners became so terrified that they afterwards gave up nearly seven millions more.¹ Stormy events followed, and the culprits found shelter for a time amid the tumults of war. Peculation did not cease, but a day of reckoning was at hand.

¹ Montcalm au Ministre de la Guerre, Lettre confidentielle, 12 Avril, 1759.

² Le Ministre à Vaudreuil et Bigot, 20 Fév. 1759.

NOTE.—The printed documents of the trial of Bigot and the other speculators include the defence of Bigot, of which the first part occupies 303 quarto pages, and the second part 764. Among the other papers are the arguments for Péan, Varin, Saint-Blin, Boishébert, Martel, Joncaire-Chabert, and several more, along with the elaborate Jugement rendu, the Requêtes du Procureur-Général, the Réponse aux Mémoires de M. Bigot et du Sieur Péan, etc., forming together five quarto volumes, all of which I have carefully examined. These are in the Library of Harvard University. There is another set, also of five volumes, in the Library of the Historical Society of Quebec, containing most of the papers just mentioned, and, bound with them, various others in manuscript, among which are documents in defence of Vaudreuil (printed in part), Estèbe, Corpron, Penisseault, Maurin, and Bréard. I have examined this collection also. The manuscript Ordres du Roy et Dépêches des Ministres, 1751-1760, as well as the letters of Vaudreuil, Bougainville, Daine, Doreil, and Montcalm throw much light on the maladministration of the time; as do many contemporary documents, notably those entitled Mémoire sur les Fraudes commises dans la Colonie, État présent du Canada, and Mémoire sur le Canada (Archives Nationales). The remarkable anonymous work printed by the Historical Society of Quebec under the title Mémoires sur le Canada depuis 1749 jusqu'à 1760, is full of curious matter concerning Bigot and his associates which squares well with other evidence. This is the source from which Smith, in his History of Canada (Quebec, 1815), drew most of his information on the subject. A manuscript which seems to be the original draft of this valuable document was preserved at the Bastille, and, with other papers, was thrown into the street when that castle was destroyed. They were gathered up, and afterwards bought by a Russian named Dubrowski, who carried them to St. Petersburg. Lord Dufferin, when minister there, procured a copy of the manuscript in question, which is now in the keeping of Abbé H. Verreau at Montreal, to whose kindness I owe the opportunity of examining it. In substance it differs little from the printed work, though the language and the arrangement often vary from it. The author, whoever he may have been, was deeply versed in Canadian affairs of the time, and though often caustic, is generally trustworthy.

¹ Procès de Bigot, Cadet, et autres, Mémoire pour François Bigot, 3^{me} partie.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1757-1758.

PITT.

FREDERIC OF PRUSSIA.—THE COALITION AGAINST HIM.—HIS DESPERATE POSITION.—ROSSBACH.—LEUTHEN.—REVERSES OF ENGLAND.—WEAKNESS OF THE MINISTRY.—A CHANGE.—PITT AND NEWCASTLE.—CHARACTER OF PITT.—SOURCES OF HIS POWER.—HIS AIMS.—LOUIS XV.—POMPADOUR.—SHE CONTROLS THE COURT AND DIRECTS THE WAR.—GLOOMY PROSPECTS OF ENGLAND.—DISASTERS.—THE NEW MINISTRY.—INSPIRING INFLUENCE OF PITT.—THE TIDE TURNS.—BRITISH VICTORIES.—PITT'S PLANS FOR AMERICA.—LOUISBOURG, TICONDEROGA, DUQUESNE.—NEW COMMANDERS.—NAVAL BATTLES.

THE war kindled in the American forest was now raging in full conflagration among the kingdoms of Europe; and in the midst stood Frederic of Prussia, a veritable fire-king. He had learned through secret agents that he was to be attacked, and that the wrath of Maria Theresa with her two allies, Pompadour and the Empress of Russia, was soon to wreak itself upon him. With his usual prompt audacity he anticipated his enemies, marched into Saxony, and began the Continental war. His position seemed desperate. England, sundered from Austria, her old ally, had made common cause with him; but he had no other friend worth the counting. France, Russia, Austria, Sweden, Saxony, the collective Germanic Empire, and most of the smaller German States had joined hands for his ruin, eager to crush him and divide the spoil, parcelling out his dominions among themselves in advance by solemn mutual compact. Against the five millions of Prussia were arrayed populations of more than a hundred millions. The little kingdom was open on all sides to attack, and her enemies were spurred on by the bitterest animosity. It was thought that one campaign would end the war. The war lasted seven years, and Prussia came out of it triumphant. Such a warrior as her indomitable king Europe has rarely seen. If the Seven Years War made the maritime and colonial greatness of England, it also raised Prussia to the rank of a first-class Power.

Frederic began with a victory, routing the Austrians in one of the fiercest of recorded conflicts, the battle of Prague. Then in his turn he was beaten at Kolin. All seemed lost. The hosts of the coalition were rolling in upon him like a deluge. Surrounded by enemies, in the jaws of destruction, hoping for little but to die in battle, this strange hero solaced himself with an exhaustless effusion of bad verses, sometimes mournful, sometimes cynical, sometimes indignant, and sometimes breathing a dauntless resolution; till, when his hour came, he threw down his pen to achieve those feats of arms which stamp him one of the foremost soldiers of the world.

The French and Imperialists, in overwhelming force, thought to crush him at Rossbach. He put them to shameful rout; and then, instead of bonfires and Te Deums, mocked at them in doggerel rhymes of amazing indecency. While he was beating the French, the Austrians took Silesia from him. He marched to recover it, found them strongly posted at Leuthen, eighty thousand men against thirty thousand, and without hesitation resolved to attack them. Never was he more heroic than on the eve of this, his crowning triumph. "The hour is at hand," he said to his generals. "I mean, in spite of the rules of military art, to attack Prince Karl's army, which is nearly thrice our own. This risk I must run, or all is lost. We must beat him or die, all of us, before his batteries." He burst unawares upon the Austrian left, and rolled their whole host together, corps upon corps, in a tumult of irretrievable ruin.

While her great ally was reaping a full harvest of laurels, England, dragged into the Continental war because that apple of discord, Hanover, belonged to her King, found little but humiliation. Minorca was wrested from her, and the Ministry had an innocent man shot to avert from themselves the popular indignation; while the same Ministry, scared by a phantom of invasion, brought over German troops to defend British soil. But now an event took place pregnant with glorious consequence. The reins of power fell into the hands of William Pitt. He had already held them for a brief space, forced into office at the end of 1756 by popular clamor, in spite of the Whig leaders and against the wishes of the King. But the place was untenable. Newcastle's Parliament would not support him; the Duke of Cumberland opposed him ; the King hated him ; and in April, 1757, he was dismissed. Then ensued eleven weeks of bickering and dispute, during which, in the midst of a great war, England was left without a government. It became clear that none was possible without Pitt ; and none with him could be permanent and strong unless joined with those influences which had thus far controlled the majorities of Parliament. Therefore an extraordinary union was brought about ; Lord Chesterfield acting as go-between to reconcile the ill-assorted pair. One of them brought to the alliance the confidence and support of the people ; the other, Court management, borough interest, and parliamentary connections. Newcastle was made First Lord of the Treasury, and Pitt, the old enemy who had repeatedly browbeat and ridiculed him, became Secretary of State, with the lead of the House of Commons and full control of the war and foreign affairs. It was a partnership of magpie and eagle. The dirty work of government, intrigue, bribery, and all the patronage that did not affect the war, fell to the share of the old politician. If Pitt could appoint generals, admirals, and ambassadors, Newcastle was welcome to the rest. "I will borrow the Duke's majorities to carry on the government," said the new secretary ; and with the audacious self-confidence that was one of his traits, he told the Duke of Devonshire, "I am sure that I can save this country, and that nobody else can." England hailed with one acclaim the undaunted leader who asked for no reward but the honor of serving her. The hour had found the man. For the next four years this imposing figure towers supreme in British history.

He had glaring faults, some of them of a sort not to have been expected in him. Vanity, the common weakness of small minds, was the most disfiguring foible of this great one. He had not the simplicity which becomes greatness so well. He could give himself theatrical airs, strike attitudes, and dart stage lightnings from his eyes; yet he was formidable even in his affectations. Behind his great intellectual powers lay a burning enthusiasm, a force of passion and fierce intensity of will, that gave redoubled impetus to the fiery shafts of his eloquence; and the haughty and masterful nature of the man had its share in the ascendancy which he long held over Parliament. He would blast the labored argument of an adversary by a look of scorn or a contemptuous wave of the hand.

The Great Commoner was not a man of the people in the popular sense of that hackneyed phrase. Though himself poor, being a younger son, he came of a rich and influential family; he was patrician at heart; both his faults and his virtues, his proud incorruptibility and passionate, domineering patriotism, bore the patrician stamp. Yet he loved liberty and he loved the people, because they were the English people. The effusive humanitarianism of to-day had no part in him, and the democracy of to-day would detest him. Yet to the middle-class England of his own time, that unenfranchised England which had little representation in Parliament, he was a voice, an inspiration, and a tower of strength. He would not flatter the people; but, turning with contempt from the tricks and devices of official politics, he threw himself with a confidence that never wavered on their patriotism and public spirit. They answered him with a boundless trust, asked but to follow his lead, gave him without stint their money and their blood, loved him for his domestic virtues and his disinterestedness, believed him even in his self-contradiction, and idolized him even in his bursts of arrogant passion. It was he who waked England from her lethargy, shook off the spell that Newcastle and his fellow-enchanters had cast over her, and taught her to know herself again. A heart that beat in unison with all that was British found responsive throbs in every corner of the vast empire that through him was to become more vast. With the instinct of his fervid patriotism he would join all its far-extended members into one, not by vain assertions of parliamentary supremacy, but by bonds of sympathy and ties of a common freedom and a common cause.

The passion for power and glory subdued in him all the sordid parts of humanity, and he made the power and glory of England one with his own. He could change front through resentment or through policy; but in whatever path he moved, his objects were the same: not to curb the power of France in America, but to annihilate it; crush her navy, cripple her foreign trade, ruin her in India, in Africa, and wherever else, east or west, she had found foothold ; gain for England the mastery of the seas, open to her the great highways of the globe, make her supreme in commerce and colonization ; and while limiting the activities of her rival to the European continent, give to her the whole world for a sphere.

To this British Roman was opposed the pampered Sardanapalus of Versailles, with the silken favorite who by calculated adultery had bought the power to ruin France. The Marquise de Pompadour, who began life as Jeanne Poisson, — Jane Fish, — daughter of the head clerk of a banking house, who then became wife of a rich financier, and then, as mistress of the King, rose to a pinnacle of gilded ignominy, chose this time to turn out of office the two ministers who had shown most ability and force, — Argenson, head of the department of war, and Machault, head of the marine and colonies ; the one because he was not subservient to her will, and the other because he had unwittingly touched the self-love of her royal paramour. She aspired to a share in the conduct of the war, and not only made and unmade ministers and generals, but discussed campaigns and battles with them, while they listened to her prating with a show of obsequious respect, since to lose her favor was to risk losing all. A few months later, when blows fell heavy and fast, she turned a deaf ear to representations of financial straits and military disasters, played the heroine, affected a greatness of soul superior to misfortune, and in her perfumed boudoir varied her tiresome graces by posing as a Roman matron. In fact she never wavered in her spite against Frederic, and her fortitude was perfect in bearing the sufferings of others and defying dangers that could not touch her.

When Pitt took office it was not over France, but over England that the clouds hung dense and black. Her prospects were of the gloomiest. "Whoever is in or whoever is out," wrote Chesterfield, "I am sure we are undone both at home and abroad: at home by our increasing debt and expenses; abroad by our ill-luck and incapacity. We are no longer a nation." And his despondency was shared by many at the beginning of the most triumphant Administration in British history. The shuffling weakness of his predecessors had left Pitt a heritage of tribulation. From America came news of Loudon's manifold failures; from Germany that of the miscarriage of the Duke of Cumberland, who, at the head of an army of Germans in British pay, had been forced to sign the convention of Kloster-Zeven, by which he promised to disband them. To these disasters was added a third, of which the new Government alone had to bear the burden. At the end of summer Pitt sent a great expedition to attack Rochefort; the military and naval commanders disagreed, and the consequence was failure. There was no light except from far-off India; where Clive won the great victory of Plassey, avenged the Black Hole of Calcutta, and prepared the ruin of the French power and the undisputed ascendancy of England.

If the English had small cause as yet to rejoice in their own successes, they found comfort in those of their Prussian allies. The rout of the French at Rossbach and of the Austrians at Leuthen spread joy through their island. More than this, they felt that they had found at last a leader after their own heart; and the consciousness regenerated them. For the paltering imbecility of the old Ministry they had the unconquerable courage, the iron purpose, the unwavering faith, the extinguishable hope, of the new one. "England has long been in labor," said Frederic of Prussia, "and at last she has brought forth a man." It was not only that instead of weak commanders Pitt gave her strong ones; the same men who had served her feebly under the blight of the Newcastle Administration served her manfully and well under his robust impulsion. "Nobody ever entered his closet," said Colonel Barré, "who did not come out of it a braver man." That inspiration was felt wherever the British flag waved. Zeal awakened with the assurance that conspicuous merit was sure of its reward, and that no officer who did his duty would now be made a sacrifice, like Admiral Byng, to appease public indignation at ministerial failures. As Nature, languishing in chill vapors and dull smothering fogs, revives at the touch of the sun, so did England spring into fresh life under the kindling influence of one great man.

With the opening of the year 1758 her course of Continental victories began. The Duke of Cumberland, the King's son, was recalled in disgrace, and a general of another stamp, Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick, was placed in command of the Germans in British pay, with the contingent of English troops now added to them. The French, too, changed commanders. The Duke of Richelieu, a dissolute old beau, returned to Paris to spend in heartless gallantries the wealth he had gained by plunder; and a young soldier-churchman, the Comte de Clermont, took his place. Prince Ferdinand pushed him hard with an inferior force, drove him out of Hanover, and captured eleven thousand of his soldiers. Clermont was recalled, and was succeeded by Contades, another incapable. One of his subordinates won for him the battle of Lutterberg; but the generalship of Ferdinand made it a barren victory, and the campaign remained a success for the English. They made descents on the French coasts, captured St.-Servan, a suburb of St.-Malo, and burned three ships of the line, twenty-four privateers, and sixty merchantmen; then entered Cherbourg, destroyed the forts, carried off or spiked the cannon, and burned twenty-seven vessels, — a success partially offset by a failure on the coast of Brittany, where they were repulsed with some loss. In Africa they drove the French from the Guinea coast, and seized their establishment at Senegal.

It was towards America that Pitt turned his heartiest efforts. His first aim was to take Louis-bourg, as a step towards taking Quebec; then Ticonderoga, that thorn in the side of the northern colonies; and lastly Fort Duquesne, the Key of the Great West. He recalled Loudon, for whom he had a fierce contempt; but there were influences which he could not disregard, and Major-General Abercromby, who was next in order of rank, an indifferent soldier, though a veteran in years, was allowed to succeed him, and lead in person the attack on Ticonderoga.¹ Pitt hoped that Brigadier Lord Howe, an admirable officer, who was joined with Abercromby, would be the real commander, and make amends for all shortcomings of his chief. To command the Louisbourg expedition, Colonel Jeffrey Amherst was recalled from the German war, and made at one leap a major-general.² He was energetic and resolute, somewhat cautious and slow, but with a bulldog tenacity of grip. Under him were three brigadiers, Whitmore, Lawrence, and Wolfe, of whom the youngest is the most noteworthy. In the luckless Rochefort expedition, Colonel James Wolfe was conspicuous by a dashing gallantry that did not escape the eye of Pitt, always on the watch for men to do his work. The young officer was ardent, headlong, void of fear, often rash, almost fanatical in his devotion to military duty, and reckless of life when the glory of England or his own was at stake. The third expedition, that against Fort Duquesne, was given to Brigadier John Forbes, whose qualities well fitted him for the task.

¹ Order, War Office, 19 Dec. 1757.

² Pitt to Abercromby, 27 Jan. 1758. Instructions for our Trusty and Well-beloved Jeffrey Amherst, Esq., Major-General of our Forces in North America, 2 March, 1758.

During his first short term of office, Pitt had given a new species of troops to the British army. These were the Scotch Highlanders, who had risen against the House of Hanover in 1745, and would rise against it again should France accomplish her favorite scheme of throwing a force into Scotland to excite another insurrection for the Stuarts. But they would be useful to fight the French abroad, though dangerous as their possible allies at home; and two regiments of them were now ordered to America.

Delay had been the ruin of the last year's attempt against Louisbourg. This time preparation was urged on apace; and before the end of winter two fleets had put to sea: one, under Admiral Boscawen, was destined for Louisbourg; while the other, under Admiral Osborn, sailed for the Mediterranean to intercept the French fleet of Admiral La Clue, who was about to sail from Toulon for America. Osborn, cruising between the coasts of Spain and Africa, barred the way to the Straits of Gibraltar, and kept his enemy imprisoned. La Clue made no attempt to force a passage; but several combats of detached ships took place, one of which is too remarkable to pass unnoticed. Captain Gardiner of the "Monmouth," a ship of four hundred and seventy men and sixty-four guns, engaged the French ship "Foudroyant," carrying a thousand men and eighty-four guns of heavier metal than those of the Englishman. Gardiner had lately been reproved by Anson, First Lord of the Admiralty, for some alleged misconduct or shortcoming, and he thought of nothing but retrieving his honor. "We must take her," he said to his crew as the "Foudroyant" hove in sight. "She looks more than a match for us, but I will not quit her while this ship can swim or I have a soul left alive;" and the sailors answered with cheers. The fight was long and furious. Gardiner was killed by a musket shot, begging his first lieutenant with his dying breath not to haul down his flag. The lieutenant nailed it to the mast. At length the "Foudroyant" ceased from thundering, struck her colors, and was carried a prize to England.¹

The typical British naval officer of that time was a rugged sea-dog, a tough and stubborn fighter, though no more so than the politer generations that followed, at home on the quarter-deck, but no ornament to the drawing-room, by reason of what his contemporary, Entick, the strenuous chronicler of the war, calls, not unapprovingly, "the ferocity of his manners." While Osborn held La Clue imprisoned at Toulon, Sir Edward Hawke, worthy leader of such men, sailed with seven ships of the line and three frigates to intercept a French squadron from Rochefort convoying a fleet of transports with troops for America. The French ships cut their cables and ran for the shore, where most of them stranded in the mud, and some threw cannon and munitions overboard to float themselves. The expedition was broken up. Of the many ships fitted out this year for the succor of Canada and Louisbourg, comparatively few reached their destination, and these for the most part singly or by twos and threes.

¹ Entick, III. 56-60.

Meanwhile Admiral Boscawen with his fleet bore away for Halifax, the place of rendezvous, and Amherst, in the ship "Dublin," followed in his wake.

CHAPTER XIX.

1758.

LOUISBOURG.

CONDITION OF THE FORTRESS. — ARRIVAL OF THE ENGLISH. — GAL-LANTRY OF WOLFE. — THE ENGLISH CAMP. — THE SIEGE BEGUN.
— PROGRESS OF THE BESIEGERS. — SALLIES OF THE FRENCH. — MADAME DRUCOUR. — COURTESIES OF WAR. — FRENCH SHIPS DE-STROYED. — CONFLAGRATION. — FURY OF THE BOMBARDMENT. — EXPLOIT OF ENGLISH SAILORS. — THE END NEAR. — THE WHITE FLAG. — SURRENDER. — RECEPTION OF THE NEWS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA. — WOLFE NOT SATISFIED. — HIS LETTERS TO AMHERST.
— HE DESTROYS GASPÉ. — RETURNS TO ENGLAND.

THE stormy coast of Cape Breton is indented by a small land-locked bay, between which and the ocean lies a tongue of land dotted with a few grazing sheep, and intersected by rows of stone that mark more or less distinctly the lines of what once were streets. Green mounds and embankments of earth enclose the whole space, and beneath the highest of them yawn arches and caverns of ancient masonry. This grassy solitude was once the "Dunkirk of America;" the vaulted caverns where the sheep find shelter from the rain were casemates where terrified women sought refuge from storms of shot and shell, and the shapeless green mounds were citadel, bastion, rampart, and glacis. Here stood Louisbourg; and not all the efforts of its conquerors, nor all the

References

- A. French Earthworks and Batteries.
- B. First Landing Place.
- C. English Redoubts.
- D. English Batteries.
- E. Pond.
- F. Siege Works.
- G. Barachois.
- H. Princess's Bastion.
- I. Queen's Bastion.
- J. King's Bastion.
- K. Dauphin's Bastion.
- L. Grand Battery.
- M. Island Battery.

SIEGE OF LOUISBOURG.

1758.

Scale of Feet.
0 100 200 300 400 500 600 700 800 900 1000

havoc of succeeding times, have availed to efface it. Men in hundreds toiled for months with lever, spade, and gunpowder in the work of destruction, and for more than a century it has served as a stone quarry; but the remains of its vast defences still tell their tale of human valor and human woe.

Stand on the mounds that were once the King's Bastion. The glistening sea spreads eastward three thousand miles, and its waves meet their first rebuff against this iron coast. Lighthouse Point is white with foam; jets of spray spout from the rocks of Goat Island; mist curls in clouds from the seething surf that lashes the crags of Black Point, and the sea boils like a caldron among the reefs by the harbor's mouth; but on the calm water within, the small fishing vessels rest tranquil at their moorings. Beyond lies a hamlet of fishermen by the edge of the water, and a few scattered dwellings dot the rough hills, bristled with stunted firs, that gird the quiet basin; while close at hand, within the precinct of the vanished fortress, stand two small farmhouses. All else is a solitude of ocean, rock, marsh, and forest.¹

At the beginning of June, 1758, the place wore another aspect. Since the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle vast sums had been spent in repairing and strengthening it; and Louisbourg was the strongest fortress in French or British America. Nevertheless it had its weaknesses. The original plan of the works had not been fully carried out; and owing, it is said, to the bad quality of the mortar, the masonry of the ramparts was in so poor a condition that it had been replaced in some parts with fascines. The circuit of the fortifications was more than a mile and a half, and the town contained about four thousand inhabitants. The best buildings in it were the convent, the hospital, the King's storehouses, and the chapel and governor's quarters, which were under the same roof. Of the private houses, only seven or eight were of stone, the rest being humble wooden structures, suited to a population of fishermen. The garrison consisted of the battalions of Artois, Bourgogne, Cambis, and Volontaires Étrangers, with two companies of artillery and twenty-four of colony troops from Canada,—in all three thousand and eighty regular troops, besides officers;¹ and to these were added a body of armed inhabitants and a band of Indians. In the harbor were five ships of the line and seven frigates, carrying in all five hundred and forty-four guns and about three thousand men.² Two hundred and nineteen cannon and seventeen mortars were mounted on the walls and outworks.³ Of these last the most important were the Grand Battery on the shore of the harbor opposite its mouth, and the Island Battery on the rocky islet at its entrance.

¹ Louisbourg is described as I saw it ten days before writing the above, after an easterly gale.

¹ Journal du Siège de Louisbourg. Twenty-nine hundred regulars were able to bear arms when the siege began. Houllière, Commandant des Troupes, au Ministre, 6 Août, 1758.

² Le Prudent, 74 guns; Entreprenant, 74; Capricieux, 64; Célèbre, 64; Bienfaisant, 64; Apollon, 50; Chèvre, 22; Biche, 18; Fidèle, 22; Écho, 26; Aréthuse, 36; Comète, 30. The Bizarre, 64, sailed for France on the eighth of June, and was followed by the Comète.

³ État d'Artillerie, appended to the Journal of Druccour. There were also forty-four cannon in reserve.

The strongest front of the works was on the land side, along the base of the peninsular triangle on which the town stood. This front, about twelve hundred yards in extent, reached from the sea on the left to the harbor on the right, and consisted of four bastions with their connecting curtains, the Princess's, the Queen's, the King's, and the Dauphin's. The King's Bastion formed part of the citadel. The glacis before it sloped down to an extensive marsh, which, with an adjacent pond, completely protected this part of the line. On the right, however, towards the harbor, the ground was high enough to offer advantages to an enemy, as was also the case, to a less degree, on the left, towards the sea. The best defence of Louisbourg was the craggy shore, that, for leagues on either hand, was accessible only at a few points, and even there with difficulty. All these points were vigilantly watched.

There had been signs of the enemy from the first opening of spring. In the intervals of fog, rain, and snow-squalls, sails were seen hovering on the distant sea; and during the latter part of May a squadron of nine ships cruised off the mouth of the harbor, appearing and disappearing, sometimes driven away by gales, sometimes lost in fogs, and sometimes approaching to within cannon-shot of the batteries. Their object was to blockade the port, — in which they failed; for French ships had come in at intervals, till, as we have seen, twelve of them lay safe anchored in the harbor, with more than a year's supply of provisions for the garrison.

At length, on the first of June, the southeastern horizon was white with a cloud of canvas. The long-expected crisis was come. Drucour, the governor, sent two thousand regulars, with about a thousand militia and Indians, to guard the various landing-places; and the rest, aided by the sailors, remained to hold the town.¹

At the end of May Admiral Boscawen was at Halifax with twenty-three ships of the line, eighteen frigates and fire-ships, and a fleet of transports, on board of which were eleven thousand and six hundred soldiers, all regulars, except five hundred provincial rangers.² Amherst had not yet arrived, and on the twenty-eighth, Boscawen, in pursuance of his orders and to prevent loss of time, put to sea without him; but scarcely had the fleet sailed out of Halifax, when they met the ship that bore the expected general. Amherst took command of the troops; and the expedition held its way till the second of June, when they saw the rocky shore-line of Cape Breton, and descried the masts of the French squadron in the harbor of Louisbourg.

¹ Rapport de Drucour. Journal du Siége.

² Of this force, according to Mante, only 9,900 were fit for duty. The table printed by Knox (I. 127) shows a total of 11,112, besides officers, artillery, and rangers. The Authentic Account of the Reduction of Louisbourg, by a Spectator, puts the force at 11,326 men, besides officers. Entick makes the whole 11,936.

Boscawen sailed into Gabarus Bay. The sea was rough ; but in the afternoon Amherst, Lawrence, and Wolfe, with a number of naval officers, reconnoitred the shore in boats, coasting it for miles, and approaching it as near as the French batteries would permit. The rocks were white with surf, and every accessible point was strongly guarded. Boscawen saw little chance of success. He sent for his captains, and consulted them separately. They thought, like him, that it would be rash to attempt a landing, and proposed a council of war. One of them alone, an old sea officer named Ferguson, advised his commander to take the responsibility himself, hold no council, and make the attempt at every risk. Boscawen took his advice, and declared that he would not leave Gabarus Bay till he had fulfilled his instructions and set the troops on shore.¹

West of Louisbourg there were three accessible places, Freshwater Cove, four miles from the town, and Flat Point, and White Point, which were nearer, the last being within a mile of the fortifications. East of the town there was an inlet called Lorambec, also available for landing. In order to distract the attention of the enemy, it was resolved to threaten all these places, and to form the troops into three divisions, two of which, under Lawrence and Whitmore, were to advance towards Flat Point and White Point, while a detached regiment was to make a feint at Lorambec. Wolfe, with the third division, was to make the real attack and try to force a landing at Fresh-water Cove, which, as it proved, was the most strongly defended of all. When on shore Wolfe was an habitual invalid, and when at sea every heave of the ship made him wretched; but his ardor was unquenchable. Before leaving England he wrote to a friend: "Being of the profession of arms, I would seek all occasions to serve; and therefore have thrown myself in the way of the American war, though I know that the very passage threatens my life, and that my constitution must be utterly ruined and undone."

¹ Entick, III. 224.

On the next day, the third, the surf was so high that nothing could be attempted. On the fourth there was a thick fog and a gale. The frigate "Trent" struck on a rock, and some of the transports were near being stranded. On the fifth there was another fog and a raging surf. On the sixth there was fog, with rain in the morning and better weather towards noon, whereupon the signal was made and the troops entered the boats; but the sea rose again, and they were ordered back to the ships. On the seventh more fog and more surf till night, when the sea grew calmer, and orders were given for another attempt. At two in the morning of the eighth the troops were in the boats again. At daybreak the frigates of the squadron, anchoring before each point of real or pretended attack, opened a fierce cannonade on the French intrenchments; and, a quarter of an hour after, the three divisions rowed towards the shore. That of the left, under Wolfe, consisted of four companies of grenadiers, with the light infantry and New England rangers, followed and supported by Fraser's Highlanders and eight more companies of grenadiers. They pulled for Freshwater Cove. Here there was a crescent-shaped beach, a quarter of a mile long, with rocks at each end. On the shore above, about a thousand Frenchmen, under Lieutenant-Colonel de Saint-Julien, lay behind entrenchments covered in front by spruce and fir trees, felled and laid on the ground with the tops outward.¹ Eight cannon and swivels were planted to sweep every part of the beach and its approaches, and these pieces were masked by young evergreens stuck in the ground before them.

The English were allowed to come within close range unmolested. Then the batteries opened, and a deadly storm of grape and musketry was poured upon the boats. It was clear in an instant that to advance farther would be destruction; and Wolfe waved his hand as a signal to sheer off. At some distance on the right, and little exposed to the fire, were three boats of light infantry under Lieutenants Hopkins and Brown and Ensign Grant; who, mistaking the signal or wilfully misinterpreting it, made directly for the shore before them. It was a few rods east of the beach; a craggy coast and a strand strewn with rocks and lashed with breakers, but sheltered from the cannon by a small projecting point. The three officers leaped ashore, followed by their men. Wolfe saw the movement, and hastened to support it. The boat of Major Scott, who commanded the light infantry and rangers, next came up, and was stove in an instant; but Scott gained the shore, climbed the crags, and found himself with ten men in front of some seventy French and Indians. Half his followers were killed and wounded, and three bullets were shot through his clothes; but with admirable gallantry he held his ground till others came to his aid.¹ The remaining boats now reached the landing. Many were stove among the rocks, and others were upset; some of the men were dragged back by the surf and drowned; some lost their muskets, and were drenched to the skin: but the greater part got safe ashore. Among the foremost was seen the tall, attenuated form of Brigadier Wolfe, armed with nothing but a cane, as he leaped into the surf and climbed the crags with his soldiers. As they reached the top they formed in compact order, and attacked and carried with the bayonet the nearest French battery, a few rods distant. The division of Lawrence soon came up; and as the attention of the enemy was now distracted, they made their landing with little opposition at the farther end of the beach, whither they were followed by Amherst himself. The French, attacked on right and left, and fearing, with good reason, that they would be cut off from the town, abandoned all their cannon and fled into the woods. About seventy of them were captured and fifty killed. The rest, circling among the hills and around the marshes, made their way to Louisbourg, and those at the intermediate posts joined their flight. The English followed through a matted growth of firs till they reached the cleared ground; when the cannon, opening on them from the ramparts, stopped the pursuit. The first move of the great game was played and won.¹

¹ Drucour reports 985 soldiers as stationed here under Saint-Julien; there were also some Indians. Freshwater Cove, otherwise Kennington Cove, was called La Cormorandière by the French.

¹ Pichon, Mémoires du Cap-Breton, 284.

Amherst made his camp just beyond range of the French cannon, and Flat Point Cove was chosen as the landing-place of guns and stores. Clearing the ground, making roads, and pitching tents filled the rest of the day. At night there was a glare of flames from the direction of the town. The French had abandoned the Grand Battery after setting fire to the buildings in it and to the houses and fish-stages along the shore of the harbor. During the following days stores were landed as fast as the surf would permit: but the task was so difficult that from first to last more than a hundred boats were stove in accomplishing it; and such was the violence of the waves that none of the siege-guns could be got ashore till the eighteenth. The camp extended two miles along a stream that flowed down to the Cove among the low, woody hills that curved around the town and harbor. Redoubts were made to protect its front, and blockhouses to guard its left and rear from the bands of Acadians known to be hovering in the woods.

¹ Journal of Amherst, in Mante, 117. Amherst to Pitt, 11 June, 1758. Authentic Account of the Reduction of Louisbourg, by a Spectator, 11. General Orders of Amherst, 3-7 June, 1759. Letter from an Officer, in Knox, I. 191; Entick, III. 225. The French accounts generally agree in essentials with the English. The English lost one hundred and nine, killed, wounded, and drowned.

Wolfe, with twelve hundred men, made his way six or seven miles round the harbor, took possession of the battery at Lighthouse Point which the French had abandoned, planted guns and mortars, and opened fire on the Island Battery that guarded the entrance. Other guns were placed at different points along the shore, and soon opened on the French ships. The ships and batteries replied. The artillery fight raged night and day; till on the twenty-fifth the island guns were dismounted and silenced. Wolfe then strengthened his posts, secured his communications, and returned to the main army in front of the town.

Amherst had reconnoitred the ground and chosen a hillock at the edge of the marsh, less than half a mile from the ramparts, as the point for opening his trenches. A road with an epaulement to protect it must first be made to the spot; and as the way was over a tract of deep mud covered with water-weeds and moss, the labor was prodigious. A thousand men worked at it day and night under the fire of the town and ships.

When the French looked landward from their ramparts they could see scarcely a sign of the impending storm. Behind them Wolfe's cannon were playing busily from Lighthouse Point and the heights around the harbor; but, before them, the broad flat marsh and the low hills seemed almost a solitude. Two miles distant, they could descry some of the English tents; but the greater part were hidden by the inequalities of the ground. On the right, a prolongation of the harbor reached nearly half a mile beyond the town, ending in a small lagoon formed by a projecting sandbar, and known as the Barachois. Near this bar lay moored the little frigate "Aréthuse," under a gallant officer named Vauquelin. Her position was a perilous one; but so long as she could maintain it she could sweep with her fire the ground before the works, and seriously impede the operations of the enemy. The other naval captains were less venturous; and when the English landed, they wanted to leave the harbor and save their ships. Drucour insisted that they should stay to aid the defence, and they complied; but soon left their moorings and anchored as close as possible under the guns of the town, in order to escape the fire of Wolfe's batteries. Hence there was great murmuring among the military officers, who would have had them engage the hostile guns at short range. The frigate "Écho," under cover of a fog, had been sent to Quebec for aid; but she was chased and captured; and, a day or two after, the French saw her pass the mouth of the harbor with an English flag at her mast-head.

When Wolfe had silenced the Island Battery, a new and imminent danger threatened Louisbourg. Boscawen might enter the harbor, overpower the French naval force, and cannonade the town on its weakest side. Therefore Drucour resolved to sink four large ships at the entrance; and on a dark and foggy night this was successfully accomplished. Two more vessels were afterwards sunk, and the harbor was then thought safe.

The English had at last finished their preparations, and were urging on the siege with determined vigor. The landward view was a solitude no longer. They could be seen in multitudes piling earth and fascines beyond the hillock at the edge of the marsh. On the twenty-fifth they occupied the hillock itself, and fortified themselves there under a shower of bombs. Then they threw up earth on the right, and pushed their approaches towards the Barachois, in spite of a hot fire from the frigate "Aréthuse." Next they appeared on the left towards the sea about a third of a mile from the Princess's Bastion. It was Wolfe, with a strong detachment, throwing up a redoubt and opening an entrenchment. Late on the night of the ninth of July six hundred French troops sallied to interrupt the work. The English grenadiers in the trenches fought stubbornly with bayonet and sword, but were forced back to the second line, where a desperate conflict in the dark took place; and after severe loss on both sides the French were driven back. Some days before, there had been another sortie on the opposite side, near the Barachois, resulting in a repulse of the French and the seizure by Wolfe of a more advanced position.

Various courtesies were exchanged between the two commanders. Drucour, on occasion of a flag of truce, wrote to Amherst that there was a surgeon of uncommon skill in Louisbourg, whose services were at the command of any English officer who might need them. Amherst on his part sent to his enemy letters and messages from wounded Frenchmen in his hands, adding his compliments to Madame Drucour, with an expression of regret for the disquiet to which she was exposed, begging her at the same time to accept a gift of pineapples from the West Indies. She returned his courtesy by sending him a basket of wine; after which amenities the cannon roared again. Madame Drucour was a woman of heroic spirit. Every day she was on the ramparts, where her presence roused the soldiers to enthusiasm; and every day with her own hand she fired three cannon to encourage them.

The English lines grew closer and closer, and their fire more and more destructive. Desgouttes, the naval commander, withdrew the "Aréthuse" from her exposed position, where her fire had greatly annoyed the besiegers. The shot-holes in her sides were plugged up, and in the dark night of the fourteenth of July she was towed through the obstructions in the mouth of the harbor, and sent to France to report the situation of Louisbourg. More fortunate than her predecessor, she escaped the English in a fog. Only five vessels now remained afloat in the harbor, and these were feebly manned, as the greater part of their officers and crews had come ashore, to the number of two thousand, lodging under tents in the town, amid the scarcely suppressed murmurs of the army officers.

On the eighth of July news came that the partisan Boishébert was approaching with four hundred Acadians, Canadians, and Micmacs to attack the English outposts and detachments. He did little or nothing, however, besides capturing a few stragglers. On the sixteenth, early in the evening, a party of English, led by Wolfe, dashed forward, drove off a band of French volunteers, seized a rising ground called Hauteur-de-la-Potence, or Gallows Hill, and began to entrench themselves scarcely three hundred yards from the Dauphin's Bastion. The town opened on them furiously with grape-shot; but in the intervals of the firing the sound of their picks and spades could plainly be heard. In the morning they were seen throwing up earth like moles as they burrowed their way forward; and on the twenty-first they opened another parallel, within two hundred yards of the rampart. Still their sappers pushed on. Every day they had more guns in position, and on right and left their fire grew hotter. Their pickets made a lodgment along the foot of the glacis, and fired up the slope at the French in the covered way.

The twenty-first was a memorable day. In the afternoon a bomb fell on the ship "Célèbre" and set her on fire. An explosion followed. The few men on board could not save her, and she drifted from her moorings. The wind blew the flames into the rigging of the "Entreprenant," and then into that of the "Capricieux." At night all three were in full blaze; for when the fire broke out the English batteries turned on them a tempest of shot and shell to prevent it from being extinguished. The glare of the triple conflagration lighted up the town, the trenches, the harbor, and the surrounding hills, while the burning ships shot off their guns at random as they slowly drifted westward, and grounded at last near the Barachois. In the morning they were consumed to the water's edge; and of all the squadron the "Prudent" and the "Bienfaisant" alone were left.

In the citadel, of which the King's Bastion formed the front, there was a large oblong stone building containing the chapel, lodgings for men and officers, and at the southern end the quarters of the Governor. On the morning after the burning of the ships a shell fell through the roof among a party of soldiers in the chamber below, burst, and set the place on fire. In half an hour the chapel and all the northern part of the building were in flames; and no sooner did the smoke rise above the bastion than the English threw into it a steady shower of missiles. Yet soldiers, sailors, and inhabitants hastened to the spot, and labored desperately to check the fire. They saved the end occupied by Drucour and his wife, but all the rest was destroyed. Under the adjacent rampart were the casemates, one of which was crowded with wounded officers, and the rest with women and children seeking shelter in these subterranean dens. Before the entrances there was a long barrier of timber to protect them from exploding shells ; and as the wind blew the flames towards it, there was danger that it would take fire and suffocate those within. They rushed out, crazed with fright, and ran hither and thither with outcries and shrieks amid the storm of iron.

In the neighboring Queen's Bastion was a large range of barracks built of wood by the New England troops after their capture of the fortress in 1745. So flimsy and combustible was it that the French writers call it a "house of cards" and "a paper of matches." Here were lodged the greater part of the garrison : but such was the danger of fire, that they were now ordered to leave it ; and they accordingly lay in the streets or along the foot of the ramparts, under shelters of timber which gave some little protection against bombs. The order was well timed ; for on the night after the fire in the King's Bastion, a shell filled with combustibles set this building also in flames. A fearful scene ensued. All the English batteries opened upon it. The roar of mortars and cannon, the rushing and screaming of round-shot and grape, the hissing of fuses and the explosion of grenades and bombs mingled with a storm of musketry from the covered way and trenches ; while, by the glare of the conflagration, the English regiments were seen drawn up in battle array, before the ramparts, as if preparing for an assault.

Two days after, at one o'clock in the morning, a burst of loud cheers was heard in the distance, followed by confused cries and the noise of musketry, which lasted but a moment. Six hundred English sailors had silently rowed into the harbor and seized the two remaining ships, the "Prudent" and the "Bienfaisant." After the first hubbub all was silent for half an hour. Then a light glowed through the thick fog that covered the water. The "Prudent" was burning. Being aground with the low tide, her captors had set her on fire, allowing the men on board to escape to the town in her boats. The flames soon wrapped her from stem to stern; and as the broad glare pierced the illumined mists, the English sailors, reckless of shot and shell, towed her companion-ship, with all on board, to a safe anchorage under Wolfe's batteries.

The position of the besieged was deplorable. Nearly a fourth of their number were in the hospitals; while the rest, exhausted with incessant toil, could find no place to snatch an hour of sleep; "and yet," says an officer, "they still show ardor." "To-day," he again says, on the twenty-fourth, "the fire of the place is so weak that it is more like funeral guns than a defence." On the front of the town only four cannon could fire at all. The rest were either dismounted or silenced by the musketry from the trenches. The masonry of the ramparts had been shaken by the concussion of their own guns; and now, in the Dauphin's and King's bastions, the English shot brought it down in masses. The trenches had been pushed so close on the rising grounds at the right that a great part of the covered way was enfiladed, while a battery on a hill across the harbor swept the whole front with a flank fire. Amherst had ordered the gunners to spare the houses of the town; but, according to French accounts, the order had little effect, for shot and shell fell everywhere. "There is not a house in the place," says the Diary just quoted, "that has not felt the effects of this formidable artillery. From yesterday morning till seven o'clock this evening we reckon that a thousand or twelve hundred bombs, great and small, have been thrown into the town, accompanied all the time by the fire of forty pieces of cannon, served with an activity not often seen. The hospital and the houses around it, which also serve as hospitals, are attacked with cannon and mortar. The surgeon trembles as he amputates a limb amid cries of Gare la bombe! and leaves his patient in the midst of the operation, lest he should share his fate. The sick and wounded, stretched on mattresses, utter cries of pain, which do not cease till a shot or the bursting of a shell ends them."¹ On the twenty-sixth the last cannon was silenced in front of the town, and the English batteries had made a breach which seemed practicable for assault.

On the day before, Drucour, with his chief officers and the engineer, Franquet, had made the tour of the covered way, and examined the state of the defences. All but Franquet were for offering to capitulate. Early on the next morning a council of war was held, at which were present Drucour, Franquet, Desgouttes, naval commander, Houllière, commander of the regulars, and the several chiefs of battalions. Franquet presented a memorial setting forth the state of the fortifications. As it was he who had reconstructed and repaired them, he was anxious to show the quality of his work in the best light possible; and therefore, in the view of his auditors, he understated the effects of the English fire. Hence an altercation arose, ending in a unanimous decision to ask for terms. Accordingly, at ten o'clock, a white flag was displayed over the breach in the Dauphin's Bastion, and an officer named Loppinot was sent out with offers to capitulate. The answer was prompt and stern: the garrison must surrender as prisoners of war; a definite reply must be given within an hour; in case of refusal the place will be attacked by land and sea.¹

¹ Early in the siege Drucour wrote to Amherst asking that the hospitals should be exempt from fire. Amherst answered that shot and shell might fall on any part of so small a town, but promised to insure the sick and wounded from molestation if Drucour would send them either to the island at the mouth of the harbor, or to any of the ships, if anchored apart from the rest. The offer was declined, for reasons not stated. Drucour gives the correspondence in his Diary.

Great was the emotion in the council; and one of its members, D'Anthonay, lieutenant-colonel of the battalion of Volontaires Étrangers, was sent to propose less rigorous terms. Amherst would not speak with him; and jointly with Boscawen despatched this note to the Governor:—

SIR,—We have just received the reply which it has pleased your Excellency to make as to the conditions of the capitulation offered you. We shall not change in the least our views regarding them. It depends on your Excellency to accept them or not; and you will have the goodness to give your answer, yes or no, within half an hour.

¹ Mante and other English writers give the text of this reply.

We have the honor to be, etc.,

E. BOSCAWEN,
J. AMHERST.¹

Drucour answered as follows: —

GENTLEMEN, — To reply to your Excellencies in as few words as possible, I have the honor to repeat that my position also remains the same, and that I persist in my first resolution.

I have the honor to be, etc.,

THE CHEVÁLIER DE DRUCOUR.

In other words, he refused the English terms, and declared his purpose to abide the assault. Loppinot was sent back to the English camp with this note of defiance. He was no sooner gone than Prévost, the intendant, an officer of functions purely civil, brought the Governor a memorial which, with or without the knowledge of the military authorities, he had drawn up in anticipation of the emergency. “The violent resolution which the council continues to hold,” said this document, “obliges me, for the good of the state, the preservation of the King’s subjects, and the averting of horrors shocking to humanity, to lay before your eyes the consequences that may ensue. What will become of the four thousand souls who compose the families of this town, of the thousand or twelve hundred sick in the hospitals, and the officers and crews of our unfortunate ships? They will be delivered over to carnage and the rage of an unbridled soldiery, eager for plunder, and impelled to deeds of horror by pretended resentment at what has formerly happened in Canada. Thus they will all be destroyed, and the memory of their fate will live forever in our colonies. . . . It remains, Monsieur," continues the paper, "to remind you that the councils you have held thus far have been composed of none but military officers. I am not surprised at their views. The glory of the King's arms and the honor of their several corps have inspired them. You and I alone are charged with the administration of the colony and the care of the King's subjects who compose it. These gentlemen, therefore, have had no regard for them. They think only of themselves and their soldiers, whose business it is to encounter the utmost extremity of peril. It is at the prayer of an intimidated people that I lay before you the considerations specified in this memorial."

¹ Translated from the Journal of Drucour.

"In view of these considerations," writes Drocour, "joined to the impossibility of resisting an assault, M. le Chevalier de Courserac undertook in my behalf to run after the bearer of my answer to the English commander and bring it back." It is evident that the bearer of the note had been in no hurry to deliver it, for he had scarcely got beyond the fortifications when Courserac overtook and stopped him. D'Anthonay, with Duvivier, major of the battalion of Artois, and Loppinot, the first messenger, was then sent to the English camp, empowered to accept the terms imposed. An English spectator thus describes their arrival: "A lieutenant-colonel came running out of the garrison, making signs at a distance, and bawling out as loud as he could, ‘ We accept! We accept!’ He was followed by two others; and they were all conducted to General Amherst’s headquarters.”¹ At eleven o’clock at night they returned with the articles of capitulation and the following letter:—

SIR,—We have the honor to send your Excellency the articles of capitulation signed.

Lieutenant-Colonel D’Anthonay has not failed to speak in behalf of the inhabitants of the town; and it is nowise our intention to distress them, but to give them all the aid in our power.

Your Excellency will have the goodness to sign a duplicate of the articles and send it to us.

It only remains to assure your Excellency that we shall with great pleasure seize every opportunity to convince your Excellency that we are with the most perfect consideration,

Sir, your Excellency’s most obedient servants,

E. BOSCAWEN.

J. AMHERST.

The articles stipulated that the garrison should be sent to England, prisoners of war, in British ships; that all artillery, arms, munitions, and stores, both in Louisbourg and elsewhere on the Island of Cape Breton, as well as on Isle St.-Jean, now Prince Edward’s Island, should be given up intact; that the gate of the Dauphin’s Bastion should be delivered to the British troops at eight o’clock in the morning; and that the garrison should lay down their arms at noon. The victors, on their part, promised to give the French sick and wounded the same care as their own, and to protect private property from pillage.

¹ Authentic Account of the Siege of Louisbourg, by a Spectator.

Drucour signed the paper at midnight, and in the morning a body of grenadiers took possession of the Dauphin's Gate. The rude soldiery poured in, swarthy with wind and sun, and begrimed with smoke and dust; the garrison, drawn up on the esplanade, flung down their muskets and marched from the ground with tears of rage; the cross of St. George floated over the shattered rampart; and Louisbourg, with the two great islands that depended on it, passed to the British Crown. Guards were posted, a stern discipline was enforced, and perfect order maintained. The conquerors and the conquered exchanged greetings, and the English general was lavish of courtesies to the brave lady who had aided the defence so well. "Every favor she asked was granted," says a Frenchman present.

Drucour and his garrison had made a gallant defence. It had been his aim to prolong the siege till it should be too late for Amherst to co-operate with Abercromby in an attack on Canada; and in this, at least, he succeeded.

Five thousand six hundred and thirty-seven officers, soldiers, and sailors were prisoners in the hands of the victors. Eighteen mortars and two hundred and twenty-one cannon were found in the town, along with a great quantity of arms, munitions, and stores.¹ At the middle of August such of the prisoners as were not disabled by wounds or sickness were embarked for England, and the merchants and inhabitants were sent to France. Brigadier Whitmore, as governor of Louisbourg, remained with four regiments to hold guard over the desolation they had made.

¹ Account of the Guns, Mortars, Shot, Shell, etc., found in the Town of Louisbourg upon its Surrender this day, signed Jeffrey Amherst, 27 July, 1758.

The fall of the French stronghold was hailed in England with noisy rapture. Addresses of congratulation to the King poured in from all the cities of the kingdom, and the captured flags were hung in St. Paul's amid the roar of cannon and the shouts of the populace. The provinces shared these rejoicings. Sermons of thanksgiving resounded from countless New England pulpits. At Newport there were fireworks and illuminations; and, adds the pious reporter, "We have reason to believe that Christians will make wise and religious improvement of so signal a favor of Divine Providence." At Philadelphia a like display was seen, with music and universal ringing of bells. At Boston "a stately bonfire like a pyramid was kindled on the top of Fort Hill, which made a lofty and prodigious blaze;" though here certain jealous patriots protested against celebrating a victory won by British regulars, and not by New England men. At New York there was a grand official dinner at the Province Arms in Broadway, where every loyal toast was echoed by the cannon of Fort George; and illuminations and fireworks closed the day.¹ In the camp of Abercromby at Lake George, Chaplain Cleaveland, of Bagley's

¹ These particulars are from the provincial newspapers.

Massachusetts regiment, wrote: "The General put out orders that the breastwork should be lined with troops, and to fire three rounds for joy, and give thanks to God in a religious way."¹ But nowhere did the tidings find a warmer welcome than in the small detached forts scattered through the solitudes of Nova Scotia, where the military exiles, restless from inaction, listened with greedy ears for every word from the great world whence they were banished. So slow were their communications with it that the fall of Louisbourg was known in England before it had reached them all. Captain John Knox, then in garrison at Annapolis, tells how it was greeted there more than five weeks after the event. It was the sixth of September. A sloop from Boston was seen coming up the bay. Soldiers and officers ran down to the wharf to ask for news. "Every soul," says Knox, "was impatient, yet shy of asking; at length, the vessel being come near enough to be spoken to, I called out, 'What news from Louisbourg?' To which the master simply replied, and with some gravity, 'Nothing strange.' This answer, which was so coldly delivered, threw us all into great consternation, and we looked at each other without being able to speak; some of us even turned away with an intent to return to the fort. At length one of our soldiers, not yet satisfied, called out with some warmth: 'Damn you, Pumpkin, is n't Louisbourg taken yet?' The poor New England man then answered: 'Taken, yes, above a month ago, and I have been there since ; but if you have never heard it before, I have got a good parcel of letters for you now.' If our apprehensions were great at first, words are insufficient to express our transports at this speech, the latter part of which we hardly waited for ; but instantly all hats flew off, and we made the neighboring woods resound with our cheers and huzzas for almost half an hour. The master of the sloop was amazed beyond expression, and declared he thought we had heard of the success of our arms eastward before, and had sought to banter him."¹ At night there was a grand bonfire and universal festivity in the fort and village.

¹ Cleveland, Journal.

Amherst proceeded to complete his conquest by the subjection of all the adjacent possessions of France. Major Dalling was sent to occupy Port Espagnol, now Sydney. Colonel Monckton was despatched to the Bay of Fundy and the River St. John with an order "to destroy the vermin who are settled there."² Lord Rollo, with the thirty-fifth regiment and two battalions of the sixtieth, received the submission of Isle St.-Jean, and tried to remove the inhabitants, — with small success ; for out of more than four thousand he could catch but seven hundred.³

The ardent and indomitable Wolfe had been the life of the siege. Wherever there was need of a quick eye, a prompt decision, and a bold dash,

¹ Knox, Historical Journal, I. 158.

² Orders of Amherst to Wolfe, 15 Aug. 1758 ; Ibid. to Monckton, 24 Aug. 1758 ; Report of Monckton, 12 Nov. 1758.

³ Villejouxin, commandant à l'Isle St.-Jean, au Ministre, 8 Sept. 1758

there his lank figure was always in the front. Yet he was only half pleased with what had been done. The capture of Louisbourg, he thought, should be but the prelude of greater conquests; and he had hoped that the fleet and army would sail up the St. Lawrence and attack Quebec. Impetuous and impatient by nature, and irritable with disease, he chafed at the delay that followed the capitulation, and wrote to his father a few days after it: "We are gathering strawberries and other wild fruits of the country, with a seeming indifference about what is doing in other parts of the world. Our army, however, on the continent wants our help." Growing more anxious, he sent Amherst a note to ask his intentions; and the General replied, "What I most wish to do is to go to Quebec. I have proposed it to the Admiral, and yesterday he seemed to think it impracticable." On which Wolfe wrote again: "If the Admiral will not carry us to Quebec, reinforcements should certainly be sent to the continent without losing a moment. This damned French garrison take up our time and attention, which might be better bestowed. The transports are ready, and a small convoy would carry a brigade to Boston or New York. With the rest of the troops we might make an offensive and destructive war in the Bay of Fundy and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. I beg pardon for this freedom, but I cannot look coolly upon the bloody inroads of those hell-hounds, the Canadians; and if nothing further is to be done, I must desire leave to quit the army."

Amherst answered that though he had meant at first to go to Quebec with the whole army, late events on the continent made it impossible; and that he now thought it best to go with five or six regiments to the aid of Abercromby. He asked Wolfe to continue to communicate his views to him, and would not hear for a moment of his leaving the army; adding, "I know nothing that can tend more to His Majesty's service than your assisting in it." Wolfe again wrote to his commander, with whom he was on terms of friendship: "An offensive, daring kind of war will awe the Indians and ruin the French. Blockhouses and a trembling defensive encourage the meanest scoundrels to attack us. If you will attempt to cut up New France by the roots, I will come with pleasure to assist."

Amherst, with such speed as his deliberate nature would permit, sailed with six regiments for Boston to reinforce Abercromby at Lake George, while Wolfe set out on an errand but little to his liking. He had orders to proceed to Gaspé, Miramichi, and other settlements on the Gulf of St. Lawrence, destroy them, and disperse their inhabitants; a measure of needless and unpardonable rigor, which, while detesting it, he executed with characteristic thoroughness. "Sir Charles Hardy and I," he wrote to his father, "are preparing to rob the fishermen of their nets and burn their huts. When that great exploit is at an end, I return to Louisbourg, and thence to England." Having finished the work, he wrote to

Amherst: "Your orders were carried into execution. We have done a great deal of mischief, and spread the terror of His Majesty's arms through the Gulf, but have added nothing to the reputation of them." The destruction of property was great; yet, as Knox writes, "he would not suffer the least barbarity to be committed upon the persons of the wretched inhabitants."¹

He returned to Louisbourg, and sailed for England to recruit his shattered health for greater conflicts.

NOTE.—Four long and minute French diaries of the siege of Louisbourg are before me. The first, that of Drucour, covers a hundred and six folio pages, and contains his correspondence with Amherst, Boscawen, and Desgouttes. The second is that of the naval captain Tourville, commander of the ship "Capricieux," and covers fifty pages. The third is by an officer of the garrison whose name does not appear. The fourth, of about a hundred pages, is by another officer of the garrison, and is also anonymous. It is an excellent record of what passed each day, and of the changing conditions, moral and physical, of the besieged. These four Journals, though clearly independent of each other, agree in nearly all essential particulars. I have also numerous letters from the principal officers, military, naval, and civil, engaged in the defence, — Drucour, Desgouttes, Houllière, Beaussier, Marolles, Tourville, Courserac, Franquet, Villejouis, Prévost, and Querdisien. These, with various other documents relating to the siege, were copied from the originals in the Archives de la Marine. Among printed authorities on the French side may be mentioned Pichon, Lettres et Mémoires pour servir à l'Histoire du Cap-Breton, and the Campaign of Louisbourg, by the Chevalier Johnstone, a Scotch Jacobite serving under Drucour.

The chief authorities on the English side are the official Journal of Amherst, printed in the London Magazine and in other contemporary periodicals, and also in Mante, History of the Late War; five letters from Amherst to Pitt, written during the siege (Public Record Office); an excellent private Journal called An Authentic Account of the Reduction of Louisbourg, by a Spectator, parts of which have been copied verbatim by Entick without acknowledgment; the admirable Journal of Captain John Knox, which contains numerous letters and orders relating to the siege; and the correspondence of Wolfe contained in his Life by Wright. Before me is the Diary of a captain or subaltern in the army of Amherst at Louisbourg, found in the garret of an old house at Windsor, Nova Scotia, on an estate belonging in 1760 to Chief Justice Deschamps. I owe the use of it to the kindness of George Wiggins, Esq., of Windsor, N. S. Mante gives an excellent plan of the siege operations, and another will be found in Jefferys, Natural and Civil History of French Dominions in North America.

¹ "Les Anglais ont très-bien traités les prisonniers qu'ils ont faits dans cette partie" [Gaspé, etc]. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 4 Nov. 1758.

CHAPTER XX.

1758.

TICONDEROGA.

ACTIVITY OF THE PROVINCES. — SACRIFICES OF MASSACHUSETTS. — THE ARMY AT LAKE GEORGE. — PROPOSED INCURSION OF LÉVIS. — PERPLEXITIES OF MONTCALM. — HIS PLAN OF DEFENCE. — CAMP OF ABERCROMBY. — HIS CHARACTER. — LORD HOWE. — HIS POPULARITY. — EMBARKATION OF ABERCROMBY. — ADVANCE DOWN LAKE GEORGE. — LANDING. — FOREST SKIRMISH. — DEATH OF HOWE. — ITS EFFECTS. — POSITION OF THE FRENCH. — THE LINES OF TICONDEROGA. — BLUNDERS OF ABERCROMBY. — THE ASSAULT. — A FRIGHTFUL SCENE. — INCIDENTS OF THE BATTLE. — BRITISH REPULSE. — PANIC. — RETREAT. — TRIUMPH OF MONTCALM.

IN the last year Loudon called on the colonists for four thousand men. This year Pitt asked them for twenty thousand, and promised that the King would supply arms, ammunition, tents, and provisions, leaving to the provinces only the raising, clothing, and pay of their soldiers; and he added the assurance that Parliament would be asked to make some compensation even for these.¹ Thus encouraged, cheered by the removal of Loudon, and animated by the unwonted vigor of British military preparation, the several provincial assemblies voted men in abundance, though the usual vexatious delays took place in raising, equipping, and sending them to the field.

¹ Pitt to the Colonial Governors, 30 Dec. 1757.

In this connection, an able English writer has brought against the colonies, and especially against Massachusetts, charges which deserve attention. Viscount Bury says: "Of all the colonies, Massachusetts was the first which discovered the designs of the French and remonstrated against their aggressions; of all the colonies she most zealously promoted measures of union for the common defence, and made the greatest exertions in furtherance of her views." But he adds that there is a reverse to the picture, and that "this colony, so high-spirited, so warlike, and apparently so loyal, would never move hand or foot in her own defence till certain of repayment by the mother country."¹ The groundlessness of this charge is shown by abundant proofs, one of which will be enough. The Englishman Pownall, who had succeeded Shirley as royal governor of the province, made this year a report of its condition to Pitt. Massachusetts, he says, "has been the frontier and advanced guard of all the colonies against the enemy in Canada," and has always taken the lead in military affairs. In the three past years she has spent on the expeditions of Johnson, Winslow, and Loudon £242,356, besides about £45,000 a year to support the provincial government, at the same time maintaining a number of forts and garrisons, keeping up scouting-parties, and building, equipping, and manning a ship of twenty guns for the service of the King. In the first two months of the present year, 1758, she made a further military outlay of £172,239. Of all these sums she has received from Parliament a reimbursement of only £70,117, and hence she is deep in debt; yet, in addition, she has this year raised, paid, maintained, and clothed seven thousand soldiers placed under the command of General Abercromby, besides above twenty-five hundred more serving the King by land or sea; amounting in all to about one in four of her able-bodied men.

¹ Bury, Exodus of the Western Nations, II. 250, 251.

Massachusetts was extremely poor by the standards of the present day, living by fishing, farming, and a trade sorely hampered by the British navigation laws. Her contributions of money and men were not ordained by an absolute king, but made by the voluntary act of a free people. Pownall goes on to say that her present war-debt, due within three years, is 366,698 pounds sterling, and that to meet it she has imposed on herself taxes amounting, in the town of Boston, to thirteen shillings and twopence to every pound of income from real and personal estate; that her people are in distress, that she is anxious to continue her efforts in the public cause, but that without some further reimbursement she is exhausted and helpless.¹ Yet in the next year she incurred a new and heavy debt. In 1760 Parliament repaid her £59,575.² Far from being fully reimbursed, the end of the war found her on the brink of bankruptcy. Connecticut made equal sacrifices in the common cause, — highly to her honor, for she was little exposed to danger, being covered by the neighboring provinces; while impoverished New Hampshire put one in three of her able-bodied men into the field.¹

¹ Pownall to Pitt, 30 Sept. 1758 (Public Record Office, America and West Indies, LXXI.). "The province of Massachusetts Bay has exerted itself with great zeal and at vast expense for the public service." Registers of Privy Council, 26 July, 1757.

² Bollan, Agent of Massachusetts, to Speaker of Assembly, 20 March, 1760. It was her share of £200,000 granted to all the colonies in the proportion of their respective efforts.

In June the combined British and provincial force which Abercromby was to lead against Ticonderoga was gathered at the head of Lake George; while Montcalm lay at its outlet around the walls of the French stronghold, with an army not one fourth so numerous. Vaudreuil had devised a plan for saving Ticonderoga by a diversion into the valley of the Mohawk under Lévis, Rigaud, and Longueuil, with sixteen hundred men, who were to be joined by as many Indians. The English forts of that region were to be attacked, Schenectady threatened, and the Five Nations compelled to declare for France.² Thus, as the Governor gave out, the English would be forced to cease from aggression, leave Montcalm in peace, and think only of defending themselves.³ “This,” writes Bougainville on the fifteenth of June, “is what M. de Vaudreuil thinks will happen, because he never doubts anything. Ticonderoga, which is the point really threatened, is abandoned without support to the troops of the line and their general.

¹ Address to His Majesty from the Governor, Council, and Assembly of New Hampshire, Jan. 1759.

² Lévis au Ministre, 17 Juin, 1758. Doreil au Ministre, 16 Juin, 1758. Montcalm à sa Femme, 18 Avril, 1758.

³ Correspondance de Vaudreuil, 1758. Livre d'Ordres, Juin, 1758.

It would even be wished that they might meet a reverse, if the consequences to the colony would not be too disastrous."

The proposed movement promised, no doubt, great advantages; but it was not destined to take effect. Some rangers taken on Lake George by a partisan officer named Langy declared with pardonable exaggeration that twenty-five or thirty thousand men would attack Ticonderoga in less than a fortnight. Vaudreuil saw himself forced to abandon his Mohawk expedition, and to order Lévis and his followers, who had not yet left Montreal, to reinforce Montcalm.¹ Why they did not go at once is not clear. The Governor declares that there were not boats enough. From whatever cause, there was a long delay, and Montcalm was left to defend himself as he could.

He hesitated whether he should not fall back to Crown Point. The engineer, Lotbinière, opposed the plan, as did also Le Mercier.² It was but a choice of difficulties, and he stayed at Ticonderoga. His troops were disposed as they had been in the summer before; one battalion, that of Berry, being left near the fort, while the main body, under Montcalm himself, was encamped by the saw-mill at the Falls, and the rest, under Bourlamaque, occupied the head of the portage, with a small advanced force at the landing-place on Lake George. It remained to determine at which of these points he should concentrate them and make his stand against the English. Ruin threatened him in any case; each position had its fatal weakness or its peculiar danger, and his best hope was in the ignorance or blundering of his enemy. He seems to have been several days in a state of indecision.

¹ Bigot au Ministre, 21 Juillet, 1758.

² N. Y. Col. Docs., X. 893. Lotbinière's relative, Vaudreuil, confirms the statement. Montcalm had not, as has been said, begun already to fall back.

In the afternoon of the fifth of July the partisan Langy, who had again gone out to reconnoitre towards the head of Lake George, came back in haste with the report that the English were embarked in great force. Montcalm sent a canoe down Lake Champlain to hasten Lévis to his aid, and ordered the battalion of Berry to begin a breastwork and abattis on the high ground in front of the fort. That they were not begun before shows that he was in doubt as to his plan of defence; and that his whole army was not now set to work at them shows that his doubt was still unsolved.

It was nearly a month since Abercromby had begun his camp at the head of Lake George. Here, on the ground where Johnson had beaten Dieskau, where Montcalm had planted his batteries, and Monro vainly defended the wooden ramparts of Fort William Henry, were now assembled more than fifteen thousand men; and the shores, the foot of the mountains, and the broken plains between them were studded thick with tents. Of regulars there were six thousand three hundred and sixty-seven, officers and soldiers, and of provincials nine thousand and thirty-four.¹ To the New England levies, or at least to their chaplains, the expedition seemed a crusade against the abomination of Babylon; and they discoursed in their sermons of Moses sending forth Joshua against Amalek. Abercromby, raised to his place by political influence, was little but the nominal commander. "A heavy man," said Wolfe in a letter to his father; "an aged gentleman, infirm in body and mind," wrote William Parkman, a boy of seventeen, who carried a musket in a Massachusetts regiment, and kept in his knapsack a dingy little note-book, in which he jotted down what passed each day.² The age of the aged gentleman was fifty-two.

Pitt meant that the actual command of the army should be in the hands of Brigadier Lord Howe,³ and he was in fact its real chief; "the noblest Englishman that has appeared in my time, and the best soldier in the British army," says Wolfe.⁴ And he elsewhere speaks of him as "that great man." Abercromby testifies to the universal respect and love with which officers and men regarded him, and Pitt calls him "a character of ancient times; a complete model of military virtue."⁵ High as this praise is, it seems to have been deserved. The young nobleman, who was

¹ Abercromby to Pitt, 12 July, 1758.

² Great-uncle of the writer, and son of the Rev. Ebenezer Parkman a graduate of Harvard, and minister of Westborough, Mass.

³ Chesterfield, Letters, IV. 260 (ed. Mahon).

⁴ Wolfe to his Father, 7 Aug. 1758, in Wright, 450.

⁵ Pitt to Grenville, 22 Aug. 1758, in Grenville Papers, I. 262.

then in his thirty-fourth year, had the qualities of a leader of men. The army felt him, from general to drummer-boy. He was its soul; and while breathing into it his own energy and ardor, and bracing it by stringent discipline, he broke through the traditions of the service and gave it new shapes to suit the time and place. During the past year he had studied the art of forest warfare, and joined Rogers and his rangers in their scouting-parties, sharing all their hardships and making himself one of them. Perhaps the reforms that he introduced were fruits of this rough self-imposed schooling. He made officers and men throw off all useless incumbrances, cut their hair close, wear leggings to protect them from briars, brown the barrels of their muskets, and carry in their knapsacks thirty pounds of meal, which they cooked for themselves; so that, according to an admiring Frenchman, they could live a month without their supply-trains.¹ "You would laugh to see the droll figure we all make," writes an officer. "Regulars as well as provincials have cut their coats so as scarcely to reach their waists. No officer or private is allowed to carry more than one blanket and a bearskin. A small portmanteau is allowed each officer. No women follow the camp to wash our linen. Lord Howe has already shown an example by going to the brook and washing his own."²

Here, as in all things, he shared the lot of the soldier, and required his officers to share it. A story is told of him that before the army embarked he invited some of them to dinner in his tent, where they found no seats but logs, and no carpet but bearskins. A servant presently placed on the ground a large dish of pork and peas, on which his lordship took from his pocket a sheath containing a knife and fork and began to cut the meat. The guests looked on in some embarrassment; upon which he said: "Is it possible, gentlemen, that you have come on this campaign without providing yourselves with what is necessary?" And he gave each of them a sheath, with a knife and fork, like his own.

¹ Pouchot, Dernière Guerre de l'Amérique, I. 140.

² Letter from Camp, 12 June, 1758, in Boston Evening Post. Another, in Boston News Letter, contains similar statements.

Yet this Lyncurgus of the camp, as a contemporary calls him, is described as a man of social accomplishments rare even in his rank. He made himself greatly beloved by the provincial officers, with many of whom he was on terms of intimacy, and he did what he could to break down the barriers between the colonial soldiers and the British regulars. When he was at Albany, sharing with other high officers the kindly hospitalities of Mrs. Schuyler, he so won the heart of that excellent matron that she loved him like a son; and, though not given to such effusion, embraced him with tears on the morning when he left her to lead his division to the lake.¹ In Westminster Abbey may be seen the tablet on which Massachusetts pays grateful tribute to his virtues, and commemorates "the affection her officers and soldiers bore to his command."

¹ Mrs. Grant, Memoirs of an American Lady, 226 (ed. 1876).

On the evening of the fourth of July, baggage, stores, and ammunition were all on board the boats, and the whole army embarked on the morning of the fifth. The arrangements were perfect. Each corps marched without confusion to its appointed station on the beach, and the sun was scarcely above the ridge of French Mountain when all were afloat. A spectator watching them from the shore says that when the fleet was three miles on its way, the surface of the lake at that distance was completely hidden from sight.¹ There were nine hundred bateaux, a hundred and thirty-five whaleboats, and a large number of heavy flatboats carrying the artillery. The whole advanced in three divisions, the regulars in the centre, and the provincials on the flanks. Each corps had its flags and its music. The day was fair and men and officers were in the highest spirits.

Before ten o'clock they began to enter the Narrows; and the boats of the three divisions extended themselves into long files as the mountains closed on either hand upon the contracted lake. From front to rear the line was six miles long. The spectacle was superb: the brightness of the summer day; the romantic beauty of the scenery; the sheen and sparkle of those crystal waters; the countless islets, tufted with pine, birch, and fir; the bordering mountains, with their green summits and sunny crags; the flash of oars and glitter of weapons; the banners, the varied uniforms,

¹ Letter from Lake George, in Boston News Letter.

SKETCH OF THE COUNTRY ROUND TYCONDEROGA

EXPLANATION.

- A. Tyconderoga.
- B. Retranchment.
- C. Abbatis.
- D. Saw-mill.
- E. French advanced Post.
- F. Isle au Mouton.
- G. Landing Place.
- H. Intrenchment to Couvert y^e Balteaux.

Drawn by L. E. Meyer of y^e 60th Reg^t and the notes of bugle, trumpet, bagpipe, and drum, answered and prolonged by a hundred woodland echoes. "I never beheld so delightful a prospect," wrote a wounded officer at Albany a fortnight after.

Rogers with the rangers, and Gage with the light infantry, led the way in whaleboats, followed by Bradstreet with his corps of boatmen, armed and drilled as soldiers. Then came the main body. The central column of regulars was commanded by Lord Howe, his own regiment, the fifty-fifth, in the van, followed by the Royal Americans, the twenty-seventh, forty-fourth, forty-sixth, and eightieth infantry, and the Highlanders of the forty-second, with their major, Duncan Campbell of Inverawe, silent and gloomy amid the general cheer, for his soul was dark with foreshadowings of death.¹ With this central column came what are described as two floating castles, which were no doubt batteries to cover the landing of the troops. On the right hand and the left were the provincials, uniformed in blue, regiment after regiment, from Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, and Rhode Island. Behind them all came the bateaux, loaded with stores and baggage, and the heavy flatboats that carried the artillery, while a rear-guard of provincials and regulars closed the long procession.²

At five in the afternoon they reached Sabbath-Day Point, twenty-five miles down the lake, where they stopped till late in the evening, waiting for the baggage and artillery, which had lagged behind; and here Lord Howe, lying on a bearskin by the side of the ranger, John Stark, questioned him as to the position of Ticonderoga and its best points of approach. At about eleven o'clock they set out again, and at daybreak entered what was then called the Second Narrows; that is to say, the contraction of the lake where it approaches its outlet. Close on their left, ruddy in the warm sunrise, rose the vast bare face of Rogers Rock, whence a French advanced party, under Langy and an officer named Trepezec, was watching their movements. Lord Howe, with Rogers and Bradstreet, went in whaleboats to reconnoitre the landing. At the place which the French called the Burnt Camp, where Montcalm had embarked the summer before, they saw a detachment of the enemy too weak to oppose them. Their men landed and drove them off. At noon the whole army was on shore. Rogers, with a party of rangers, was ordered forward to reconnoitre, and the troops were formed for the march.

¹ See Appendix G.

² Letter from Lake George, in Boston News Letter. Even Rogers, the ranger, speaks of the beauty of the scene.

From this part of the shore¹ a plain covered with forest stretched northwestward half a mile or more to the mountains behind which lay the valley of Trout Brook. On this plain the army began its march in four columns, with the intention of passing round the western bank of the river of the outlet, since the bridge over it had been destroyed. Rogers, with the provincial regiments of Fitch and Lyman, led the way, at some distance before the rest. The forest was extremely dense and heavy, and so obstructed with undergrowth that it was impossible to see more than a few yards in any direction, while the ground was encumbered with fallen trees in every stage of decay. The ranks were broken, and the men struggled on as they could in dampness and shade, under a canopy of boughs that the sun could scarcely pierce. The difficulty increased when, after advancing about a mile, they came upon undulating and broken ground. They were now not far from the upper rapids of the outlet. The guides became bewildered in the maze of trunks and boughs; the marching columns were confused, and fell in one upon the other. They were in the strange situation of an army lost in the woods.

¹ Between the old and new steamboat-landings, and parts adjacent.

The advanced party of French under Langy and Trepezec, about three hundred and fifty in all, regulars and Canadians, had tried to retreat; but before they could do so, the whole English army had passed them, landed, and placed itself between them and their countrymen. They had no resource but to take to the woods. They seem to have climbed the steep gorge at the side of Rogers Rock and followed the Indian path that led to the valley of Trout Brook, thinking to descend it, and, by circling along the outskirts of the valley of Ticonderoga, reach Montcalm's camp at the saw-mill. Langy was used to bushranging; but he too became perplexed in the blind intricacies of the forest. Towards the close of the day he and his men had come out from the valley of Trout Brook, and were near the junction of that stream with the river of the outlet, in a state of some anxiety, for they could see nothing but brown trunks and green boughs. Could any of them have climbed one of the great pines that here and there reared their shaggy spires high above the surrounding forest, they would have discovered where they were, but would have gained not the faintest knowledge of the enemy. Out of the woods on the right they would have seen a smoke rising from the burning huts of the French camp at the head of the portage, which Bourlamaque had set on fire and abandoned. At a mile or more in front, the saw-mill at the Falls might perhaps have been descried, and, by glimpses between the trees, the tents of the neighboring camp where Montcalm still lay with his main force. All the rest seemed lonely as the grave; mountain and valley lay wrapped in primeval woods, and none could have dreamed that, not far distant, an army was groping its way, buried in foliage; no rumbling of wagons and artillery trains, for none were there; all silent but the cawing of some crow flapping his black wings over the sea of tree-tops.

Lord Howe, with Major Israel Putnam and two hundred rangers, was at the head of the principal column, which was a little in advance of the three others. Suddenly the challenge, Qui vive! rang sharply from the thickets in front. Français! was the reply. Langy's men were not deceived; they fired out of the bushes. The shots were returned; a hot skirmish followed; and Lord Howe dropped dead, shot through the breast. All was confusion. The dull, vicious reports of musketry in thick woods, at first few and scattering, then in fierce and rapid volleys, reached the troops behind. They could hear, but see nothing. Already harassed and perplexed, they became perturbed. For all they knew, Montcalm's whole army was upon them. Nothing prevented a panic but the steadiness of the rangers, who maintained the fight alone till the rest came back to their senses. Rogers, with his reconnoitring party, and the regiments of Fitch and Lyman, were at no great distance in front. They all turned on hearing the musketry, and thus the French were caught between two fires. They fought with desperation. About fifty of them at length escaped; a hundred and forty-eight were captured, and the rest killed or drowned in trying to cross the rapids. The loss of the English was small in numbers, but immeasurable in the death of Howe. "The fall of this noble and brave officer," says Rogers, "seemed to produce an almost general languor and consternation through the whole army." "In Lord Howe," writes another contemporary, Major Thomas Mante, "the soul of General Abercromby's army seemed to expire. From the unhappy moment the General was deprived of his advice, neither order nor discipline was observed, and a strange kind of infatuation usurped the place of resolution." The death of one man was the ruin of fifteen thousand.

The evil news was despatched to Albany, and in two or three days the messenger who bore it passed the house of Mrs. Schuyler on the meadows above the town. "In the afternoon," says her biographer, "a man was seen coming from the north galloping violently without his hat. Pedrom, as he was familiarly called, Colonel Schulyer's only surviving brother, was with her, and ran instantly to inquire, well knowing that he rode express. The man galloped on, crying out that Lord Howe was killed. The mind of our good aunt had been so engrossed by her anxiety and fears for the event impending, and so impressed with the merit and magnanimity of her favorite hero, that her wonted firmness sank under the stroke, and she broke out into bitter lamentations. This had such an effect on her friends and domestics that shrieks and sobs of anguish echoed through every part of the house."

The effect of the loss was seen at once. The army was needlessly kept under arms all night in the forest, and in the morning was ordered back to the landing whence it came.¹ Towards noon, however, Bradstreet was sent with a detachment of regulars and provincials to take possession of the saw-mill at the Falls, which Montcalm had abandoned the evening before. Bradstreet rebuilt the bridges destroyed by the retiring enemy, and sent word to his commander that the way was open; on which Abercromby again put his army in motion, reached the Falls late in the afternoon, and occupied the deserted encampment of the French.

¹ Abercromby to Pitt, 12 July, 1758.

Montcalm with his main force had held this position at the Falls through most of the preceding day, doubtful, it seems, to the last whether he should not make his final stand there. Bourlamaque was for doing so; but two old officers, Bernès and Montguy, pointed out the danger that the English would occupy the neighboring heights;¹ whereupon Montcalm at length resolved to fall back. The camp was broken up at five o'clock. Some of the troops embarked in bateaux, while others marched a mile and a half along the forest road, passed the place where the battalion of Berry was still at work on the breastwork begun in the morning, and made their bivouac a little farther on, upon the cleared ground that surrounded the fort.

The peninsula of Ticonderoga consists of a rocky plateau, with low grounds on each side, bordering Lake Champlain on the one hand, and the outlet of Lake George on the other. The fort stood near the end of the peninsula, which points towards the southeast. Thence, as one goes westward, the ground declines a little, and then slowly rises, till, about half a mile from the fort, it reaches its greatest elevation, and begins still more gradually to decline again. Thus a ridge is formed across the plateau between the steep declivities that sink to the low grounds on right and left. Some weeks before, a French officer named Hugues had suggested the defence of this ridge by means of an abattis.¹ Montcalm approved his plan; and now, at the eleventh hour, he resolved to make his stand here. The two engineers, Pontleroy and Desandrouin, had already traced the outline of the works, and the soldiers of the battalion of Berry had made some progress in constructing them. At dawn of the seventh, while Abercromby, fortunately for his enemy, was drawing his troops back to the landing-place, the whole French army fell to their task. The regimental colors were planted along the line, and the officers, stripped to the shirt, took axe in hand and labored with their men. The trees that covered the ground were hewn down by thousands, the tops lopped off, and the trunks piled one upon another to form a massive breastwork. The line followed the top of the ridge, along which it zig-zagged in such a manner that the whole front could be swept by flank-fires of musketry and grape. Abercromby describes the wall of logs as between eight and nine feet high;² in which case there must have been a rude banquette, or platform to fire from, on the inner side. It was certainly so high that nothing could be seen over it but the crowns of the soldiers' hats. The upper tier was formed of single logs, in which notches were cut to serve as loopholes; and in some places sods and bags of sand were piled along the top, with narrow spaces to fire through.³ From the central part of

¹ Pouchot, I. 145.

¹ N. Y. Col. Docs., X. 708.

² Abercromby to Barrington, 12 July, 1758. "At least eight feet high." Rogers, Journals, 116.

³ A Swiss officer of the Royal Americans, writing on the 14th, says that the line the ground sloped away like a natural glacis ; while at the sides, and especially on the left, it was undulating and broken. Over this whole space, to the distance of a musket-shot from the works, the forest was cut down, and the trees left lying where they fell among the stumps, with tops turned outwards, forming one vast abatis, which, as a Massachusetts officer says, looked like a forest laid flat by a hurricane.¹ But the most formidable obstruction was immediately along the front of the breastwork, where the ground was covered with heavy boughs, overlapping and interlaced, with sharpened points bristling into the face of the assailant like the quills of a porcupine. As these works were all of wood, no vestige of them remains. The earthworks now shown to tourists as the lines of Montcalm are of later construction ; and though on the same ground, are not on the same plan.²

Here, then, was a position which, if attacked in front with musketry alone, might be called impregnable. But would Abercromby so attack it ? He had several alternatives. He might attempt the flank and rear of his enemy by way of the low grounds on the right and left of the plateau, a movement which the precautions of Montcalm had made difficult, but not impossible. Or, instead of leaving his artillery idle on the strand there were two, and in some parts three, rows of loopholes. See the letter in Pennsylvania Archives, III. 472.

¹ Colonel Oliver Partridge to his Wife, 12 July, 1758.

² A new line of works was begun four days after the battle, to replace the log breastwork. Malartic, Journal. Travaux faits à Carillon, 1758.

of Lake George, he might bring it to the front and batter the breastwork, which, though impervious to musketry, was worthless against heavy cannon. Or he might do what Burgoyne did with success a score of years later, and plant a battery on the heights of Rattlesnake Hill, now called Mount Defiance, which commanded the position of the French, and whence the inside of their breastwork could be scoured with round-shot from end to end. Or, while threatening the French front with a part of his army, he could march the rest a short distance through the woods on his left to the road which led from Ticonderoga to Crown Point, and which would soon have brought him to the place called Five-Mile Point, where Lake Champlain narrows to the width of an easy rifle-shot, and where a battery of field-pieces would have cut off all Montcalm's supplies and closed his only way of retreat. As the French were provisioned for but eight days, their position would thus have been desperate. They plainly saw the danger; and Doreil declares that had the movement been made, their whole army must have surrendered.¹ Montcalm had done what he could; but the danger of his position was inevitable and extreme. His hope lay in Abercromby; and it was a hope well founded. The action of the English general answered the utmost wishes of his enemy.

¹ Doreil au Ministre, 28 Juillet, 1758. The Chevalier Johnstone thought that Montcalm was saved by Abercromby's ignorance of the ground. A Dialogue in Hades (Quebec Historical Society).

Abercromby had been told by his prisoners that Montcalm had six thousand men, and that three thousand more were expected every hour. Therefore he was in haste to attack before these succors could arrive. As was the general, so was the army. "I believe," writes an officer, "we were one and all infatuated by a notion of carrying every obstacle by a mere coup de mousqueterie."¹ Leadership perished with Lord Howe, and nothing was left but blind, headlong valor.

Clerk, chief engineer, was sent to reconnoitre the French works from Mount Defiance; and came back with the report that, to judge from what he could see, they might be carried by assault. Then, without waiting to bring up his cannon, Abercromby prepared to storm the lines.

The French finished their breastwork and abatis on the evening of the seventh, encamped behind them, slung their kettles, and rested after their heavy toil. Lévis had not yet appeared; but at twilight one of his officers, Captain Pouchot, arrived with three hundred regulars, and announced that his commander would come before morning with a hundred more. The reinforcement, though small, was welcome, and Lévis was a host in himself. Pouchot was told that the army was half a mile off. Thither he repaired, made his report to Montcalm, and looked with amazement at the prodigious amount of work accomplished in one day.² Lévis himself arrived in the course of the night, and approved the arrangement of the troops. They lay behind their lines till daybreak; then the drums beat, and they formed in order of battle.¹ The battalions of La Sarre and Languedoc were posted on the left, under Bourlamaque, the first battalion of Berry with that of Royal Roussillon in the centre, under Montcalm, and those of La Reine, Béarn, and Guienne on the right, under Lévis. A detachment of volunteers occupied the low grounds between the breastwork and the outlet of Lake George; while, at the foot of the declivity on the side towards Lake Champlain, were stationed four hundred and fifty colony regulars and Canadians, behind an abattis which they had made for themselves; and as they were covered by the cannon of the fort, there was some hope that they would check any flank movement which the English might attempt on that side. Their posts being thus assigned, the men fell to work again to strengthen their defences. Including those who came with Lévis, the total force of effective soldiers was now thirty-six hundred.²

¹ See the letter in Knox, I. 148.

² Pouchot, I. 137.

Soon after nine o'clock a distant and harmless fire of small-arms began on the slopes of Mount Defiance. It came from a party of Indians who had just arrived with Sir William Johnson, and who, after amusing themselves in this manner for a time, remained for the rest of the day safe spectators of the fight. The soldiers worked undisturbed till noon, when volleys of musketry were heard from the forest in front. It was the English light troops driving in the French pickets. A cannon was fired as a signal to drop tools and form for battle. The white uniforms lined the breastwork in a triple row, with the grenadiers behind them as a reserve, and the second battalion of Berry watching the flanks and rear.

¹ Livre d'Ordres, Disposition de Défense des Retranchements, 8 Juillet, 1758.

² Montcalm, Relation de la Victoire remportée à Carillon, 8 Juillet, 1758. Vaudreuil puts the number at 4,760, besides officers, which includes the garrison and laborers at the fort. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 28 Juillet, 1758.

Meanwhile the English army had moved forward from its camp by the saw-mill. First came the rangers, the light infantry, and Bradstreet's armed boatmen, who, emerging into the open space, began a spattering fire. Some of the provincial troops followed, extending from left to right, and opening fire in turn; then the regulars, who had formed in columns of attack under cover of the forest, advanced their solid red masses into the sunlight, and passing through the intervals between the provincial regiments, pushed forward to the assault. Across the rough ground, with its maze of fallen trees whose leaves hung withering in the July sun, they could see the top of the breastwork, but not the men behind it; when, in an instant, all the line was obscured by a gush of smoke, a crash of exploding firearms tore the air, and grapeshot and musket-balls swept the whole space like a tempest; "a damnable fire," says an officer who heard them screaming about his ears. The English had been ordered to carry the works with the bayonet; but their ranks were broken by the obstructions through which they struggled in vain to force their way, and they soon began to fire in turn. The storm raged in full fury for an hour. The assailants pushed close to the breastwork; but there they were stopped by the bristling mass of sharpened branches, which they could not pass under the murderous cross-fires that swept them from front and flank. At length they fell back, exclaiming that the works were impregnable. Abercromby, who was at the saw-mill, a mile and a half in the rear, sent orders to attack again, and again they came on as before.

The scene was frightful: masses of infuriated men who could not go forward and would not go back; straining for an enemy they could not reach, and firing on an enemy they could not see; caught in the entanglement of fallen trees; tripped by briars, stumbling over logs, tearing through boughs; shouting, yelling, cursing, and pelted all the while with bullets that killed them by scores, stretched them on the ground, or hung them on jagged branches in strange attitudes of death. The provincials supported the regulars with spirit, and some of them forced their way to the foot of the wooden wall.

The French fought with the intrepid gayety of their nation, and shouts of Vive le Roi! and Vive notre Général! mingled with the din of musketry. Montcalm, with his coat off, for the day was hot, directed the defence of the centre, and repaired to any part of the line where the danger for the time seemed greatest. He is warm in praise of his enemy, and declares that between one and seven o'clock they attacked him six successive times. Early in the action Abercromby tried to turn the French left by sending twenty bateaux, filled with troops, down the outlet of Lake George. They were met by the fire of the volunteers stationed to defend the low grounds on that side, and, still advancing, came within range of the cannon of the fort, which sank two of them and drove back the rest.

A curious incident happened during one of the attacks. De Bassignac, a captain in the battalion of Royal Roussillon, tied his handkerchief to the end of a musket and waved it over the breastwork in defiance. The English mistook it for a sign of surrender, and came forward with all possible speed, holding their muskets crossed over their heads in both hands, and crying Quarter. The French made the same mistake; and thinking that their enemies were giving themselves up as prisoners, ceased firing, and mounted on the top of the breastwork to receive them. Captain Pouchot, astonished, as he says, to see them perched there, looked out to learn the cause, and saw that the enemy meant anything but surrender. Whereupon he shouted with all his might: "Tirez! Tirez! Ne voyez-vous pas que ces gens-là vont vous enlever?" The soldiers, still standing on the breastwork, instantly gave the English a volley, which killed some of them, and sent back the rest discomfited.¹

¹ Pouchot, I. 153. Both Niles and Entick mention the incident.

This was set to the account of Gallic treachery. "Another deceit the enemy put upon us," says a military letter-writer: "they raised their hats above the breastwork, which our people fired at; they, having loopholes to fire through, and being covered by the sods, we did them little damage, except shooting their hats to pieces."¹ In one of the last assaults a soldier of the Rhode Island regiment, William Smith, managed to get through all obstructions and ensconce himself close under the breastwork, where in the confusion he remained for a time unnoticed, improving his advantages meanwhile by shooting several Frenchmen. Being at length observed, a soldier fired vertically down upon him and wounded him severely, but not enough to prevent his springing up, striking at one of his enemies over the top of the wall, and braining him with his hatchet. A British officer who saw the feat, and was struck by the reckless daring of the man, ordered two regulars to bring him off; which, covered by a brisk fire of musketry, they succeeded in doing. A letter from the camp two or three weeks later reports him as in a fair way to recover, being, says the writer, much braced and invigorated by his anger against the French, on whom he was swearing to have his revenge.²

Toward five o'clock two English columns joined in a most determined assault on the extreme

¹ Letter from Saratoga, 12 July, 1758, in New Hampshire Gazette. Compare Pennsylvania Archives, III. 474.

² Letter from Lake George, 26 July, 1758, in Boston Gazette. The story is given, without much variation, in several other letters.

right of the French, defended by the battalions of Guienne and Béarn. The danger for a time was imminent. Montcalm hastened to the spot with the reserves. The assailants hewed their way to the foot of the breastwork; and though again and again repulsed, they again and again renewed the attack. The Highlanders fought with stubborn and unconquerable fury. "Even those who were mortally wounded," writes one of their lieutenants, "cried to their companions not to lose a thought upon them, but to follow their officers and mind the honor of their country. Their ardor was such that it was difficult to bring them off."¹ Their major, Campbell of Inverawe, found his foreboding true. He received a mortal shot, and his clansmen bore him from the field. Twenty-five of their officers were killed or wounded, and half the men fell under the deadly fire that poured from the loopholes. Captain John Campbell and a few followers tore their way through the abattis, climbed the breastwork, leaped down among the French, and were bayoneted there.²

As the colony troops and Canadians on the low ground were left undisturbed, Lévis sent them an order to make a sortie and attack the left flank of the charging columns. They accordingly posted themselves among the trees along the declivity, and fired upwards at the enemy, who presently shifted their position to the right, out of the line of shot. The assault still continued, but in vain ; and at six there was another effort, equally fruitless. From this time till half-past seven a lingering fight was kept up by the rangers and other provincials, firing from the edge of the woods and from behind the stumps, bushes, and fallen trees in front of the lines. Its only objects were to cover their comrades, who were collecting and bringing off the wounded, and to protect the retreat of the regulars, who fell back in disorder to the Falls. As twilight came on, the last combatant withdrew, and none were left but the dead. Abercromby had lost in killed, wounded, and missing, nineteen hundred and forty-four officers and men.¹ The loss of the French, not counting that of Langy's detachment, was three hundred and seventy-seven. Bourtoulamaque was dangerously wounded ; Bougainville slightly ; and the hat of Lévis was twice shot through.²

¹ Letter of Lieutenant William Grant, in MacLachlan's Highlands, II. 340 (ed. 1875).

² Ibid., II. 339.

Montcalm, with a mighty load lifted from his soul, passed along the lines, and gave the tired soldiers the thanks they nobly deserved. Beer, wine, and food were served out to them, and they bivouacked for the night on the level ground between the breastwork and the fort. The enemy had met a terrible rebuff ; yet the danger was not over. Abercromby still had more than thirteen thousand men, and he might renew the attack with cannon. But, on the morning of the ninth, a band of volunteers who had gone out to watch him brought back the report that he was in full retreat. The saw-mill at the Falls was on fire, and the last English soldier was gone. On the morning of the tenth, Lévis, with a strong detachment, followed the road to the landing-place, and found signs that a panic had overtaken the defeated troops. They had left behind several hundred barrels of provisions and a large quantity of baggage; while in a marshy place that they had crossed was found a considerable number of their shoes, which had stuck in the mud, and which they had not stopped to recover. They had embarked on the morning after the battle, and retreated to the head of the lake in a disorder and dejection wofully contrasted with the pomp of their advance. A gallant army was sacrificed by the blunders of its chief.

¹ See Appendix G.

² Lévis au Ministre, 13 Juillet, 1758.

Montcalm announced his victory to his wife in a strain of exaggeration that marks the exaltation of his mind. "Without Indians, almost without Canadians or colony troops,—I had only four hundred,—alone with Lévis and Bourlamaque and the troops of the line, thirty-one hundred fighting men, I have beaten an army of twenty-five thousand. They repassed the lake precipitately, with a loss of at least five thousand. This glorious day does infinite honor to the valor of our battalions. I have no time to write more. I am well, my dearest, and I embrace you." And he wrote to his friend Doreil: "The army, the too-small army of the King, has beaten the enemy. What a day for France! If I had had two hundred Indians to send out at the head of a thousand picked men under the Chevalier de Lévis, not many would have escaped. Ah, my dear Doreil, what soldiers are ours! I never saw the like. Why were they not at Louisbourg?"

On the morrow of his victory he caused a great cross to be planted on the battle-field, inscribed with these lines, composed by the soldier-scholar himself, —

"Quid dux? quid miles? quid strata ingentia ligna?
En Signum! en victor! Deus hic, Deus ipse triumphat."

"Soldier and chief and rampart's strength are nought; Behold the conquering Cross! 'T is God the triumph wrought."¹

¹ Along with the above paraphrase I may give that of Montcalm himself, which was also inscribed on the cross: —

"Chrétien! ce ne fut point Montcalm et la prudence, Ces arbres renversés, ces héros, leurs exploits,
Qui des Anglais confus ont brisé l'espérance;
C'est le bras de ton Dieu, vainqueur sur cette croix."

In the same letter in which Montcalm sent these lines to his mother he says: "Je vous envoie, pour vous amuser, deux chansons sur le combat du 8 Juillet, dont l'une est en style des poissardes de Paris." One of these songs, which were written by soldiers after the battle, begins, —

"Je chante des François
La valeur et la gloire,
Qui toujours sur l'Anglois
Remportent la victoire.
Ce sont des héros,
Tous nos généraux,
Et Montcalm et Lévis,
Et Bourlamaque aussi.

"Mars, qui les engendra
Pour l'honneur de la France,
D'abord les anima
De sa haute vaillance,
Et les transporta
Dans le Canada,
Où l'on voit les François
Culbuter les Anglois."

The other effusion of the military muse is in a different strain, "en style des poissardes de Paris." The following is a specimen, given literatim:—

"L'aumônier fit l'exhortation,
Puis il donnit l'absolution ;
Aisément cela se peut croire.
Enfants, dit-il, animez-vous !
L'bon Dieu, sa mère, tout est pour vous.

S—é ! j'sommes catholiques. Les Anglois sont des hérétiques.

"Ce sont des chiens ; à coups d'pieds, a coups d'poings faut leur casser la gueule et la mâchoire.

"Soldats, officiers, généraux, Chacun en ce jour fut héros.
Aisément cela se peut croire.
Montcalm, comme défunt Annibal,
S'montroit soldat et général.

S—é ! s'il y avoit quelqu'un qui ne l'aimât point !

"Je veux être un chien ; à coups d'pieds, a coups d'poings, j'lui cass'rai la gueule et la mâchoire."

This is an allusion to Vaudreuil. On the battle of Ticonderoga, see Appendix G.

CHAPTER XXI.

1758.

FORT FRONTENAC.

THE ROUTED ARMY.—INDIGNATION AT ABERCROMBY.—JOHN CLEAVELAND AND HIS BROTHER CHAPLAINS.—REGULARS AND PROVINCIALS.—PROVINCIAL SURGEONS.—FRENCH RAIDS.—ROGERS DEFEATS MARIN.—ADVENTURES OF PUTNAM.—EXPEDITION OF BRADSTREET.—CAPTURE OF FORT FRONTENAC.

THE rashness of Abercromby before the fight was matched by his poltroonery after it. Such was his terror that on the evening of his defeat he sent an order to Colonel Cummings, commanding at Fort William Henry, to send all the sick and wounded and all the heavy artillery to New York without delay.¹ He himself followed so closely upon this disgraceful missive that Cummings had no time to obey it.

The defeated and humbled troops proceeded to reoccupy the ground they had left a few days before in the flush of confidence and pride; and young Colonel Williams, of Massachusetts, lost no time in sending the miserable story to his uncle Israel. His letter, which is dated "Lake George (sorrowful situation), July y^e 11th," ends thus: "I have told facts; you may put the epithets upon them. In one word, what with fatigue, want of sleep, exercise of mind, and leaving the place we went to capture, the best part of the army is unhinged. I have told enough to make you sick, if the relation acts on you as the facts have on me."

¹ Cunningham, aide-de-camp of Abercromby, to Cummings, 8 July, 1758.

In the routed army was the sturdy John Cleaveland, minister of Ipswich, and now chaplain of Bagley's Massachusetts regiment, who regarded the retreat with a disgust that was shared by many others. "This day," he writes in his Diary, at the head of Lake George, two days after the battle, "wherever I went I found people, officers and soldiers, astonished that we left the French ground, and commenting on the strange conduct in coming off." From this time forth the provincials called their commander Mrs. Nabbycromby.¹ He thought of nothing but fortifying himself. "Towards evening," continues the chaplain, "the General, with his Rehoboam counsellors, came over to line out a fort on the rocky hill where our breastwork was last year. Now we begin to think strongly that the grand expedition against Canada is laid aside, and a foundation made totally to impoverish our country." The whole army was soon intrenched. The chaplain of Bagley's, with his brother Ebenezer, chaplain of another regiment, one day walked round the camp and carefully inspected it. The tour proved satisfactory to the militant divines, and John Cleaveland reported to his wife: "We have built an extraordinary good breastwork, sufficient to defend ourselves against twenty thousand of the enemy, though at present we have not above a third part of that number fit for duty." Many of the troops had been sent to the Mohawk, and others to the Hudson.

¹ Trumbull, Hist. Connecticut, II. 392. "Nabby" (Abigail) was then a common female name in New England.

In the regiment of which Cleaveland was chaplain there was a young surgeon from Danvers, Dr. Caleb Rea, who also kept a copious diary, and, being of a serious turn, listened with edification to the prayers and exhortations to which the yeoman soldiery were daily summoned. In his zeal, he made an inquest among them for singers, and chose the most melodious to form a regimental choir, "the better to carry on the daily service of singing psalms;" insomuch that the New England camp was vocal with rustic harmony, sincere, if somewhat nasal. These seemly observances were not inconsistent with a certain amount of disorder among the more turbulent spirits, who, removed from the repressive influence of tight-laced village communities, sometimes indulged in conduct which grieved the conscientious surgeon. The rural New England of that time, with its narrowness, its prejudices, its oddities, its combative energy, and rugged, unconquerable strength, is among the things of the past, or lingers in remote corners where the whistle of the locomotive is never heard. It has spread itself in swarming millions over half a continent, changing with changing conditions; and even the part of it that clings to the ancestral hive has transformed and continues to transform itself.

The provincials were happy in their chaplains, among whom there reigned a marvellous harmony, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and Congregationalists meeting twice a week to hold prayer-meetings together. "A rare instance indeed," says Dr. Rea, "and perhaps scarce ever was an army blessed with such a set of chaplains before." On one occasion, just before the fatal expedition, nine of them, after prayers and breakfast, went together to call upon the General. "He treated us very kindly," says the chaplain of Bagley's, "and told us that he hoped we would teach the people to do their duty and be courageous; and told us a story of a chaplain in Germany, where he was, who just before the action told the soldiers he had not time to say much, and therefore should only say: 'Be courageous; for no cowards go to heaven.' The General treated us to a bowl of punch and a bottle of wine, and then we took our leave of him."¹

When Cleaveland and the more gifted among his brethren preached of a Sunday, officers and men of the regulars, no less than the provincials, came to listen; yet that pious Sabbatarian, Dr. Rea, saw much to afflict his conscience. "Sad, sad it is to see how the Sabbath is profaned in the camp," above all by "the horrid custom of swearing, more especially among the regulars; and I can't but charge our defeat on this sin."

It would have been well had the harmony that prevailed among the chaplains found its counterpart among the men of the sword; but between the British regular officers and those of the provinces there was anything but an equal brotherhood. It is true that Pitt, in the spirit of conciliation which he always showed towards the colonies, had procured a change in the regulations concerning the relative rank of British and provincial officers, thus putting them in a position much nearer equality; but this, while appeasing the provincials, seems to have annoyed the others. Till the campaign was nearly over, not a single provincial colonel had been asked to join in a council of war; and, complains Cleaveland, "they know no more of what is to be done than a sergeant, till the orders come out." Of the British officers, the greater part had seen but little active service. Most of them were men of family, exceedingly prejudiced and insular, whose knowledge of the world was limited to certain classes of their own countrymen, and who looked down on all others, whether domestic or foreign. Towards the provincials their attitude was one of tranquil superiority, though its tranquillity was occasionally disturbed by what they regarded as absurd pretension on the part of the colony officers. One of them gave vent to his feelings in an article in the London Chronicle, in which he advanced the very reasonable proposition that "a farmer is not to be taken from the plough and made an officer in a day;" and he was answered wrathfully, at great length, in the Boston Evening Post, by a writer signing himself "A New England Man." The provincial officers, on the other hand, and especially those of New England, being no less narrow and prejudiced, filled with a sensitive pride and a jealous local patriotism, and bred up in a lofty appreciation of the merits and importance of their country, regarded British superciliousness with a resentment which their strong love for England could not overcome. This feeling was far from being confined to the officers. A provincial regiment stationed at Half-Moon, on the Hudson, thought itself affronted by Captain Cruikshank, a regular officer; and the men were so incensed that nearly half of them went off in a body. The deportment of British officers in the Seven Years War no doubt had some part in hastening on the Revolution.

¹ For the use of the Diary of Chaplain Cleaveland, as well as of his letters to his wife, I am indebted to the kindness of Miss Abby E. Cleaveland, his descendant.

What with levelling Montcalm's siege works, planting palisades, and grubbing up stumps in their bungling and laborious way, the regulars found abundant occupation. Discipline was stiff and peremptory. The wooden horse and the whipping-post were conspicuous objects in the camp, and often in use. Caleb Rea, being tender-hearted, never went to see the lash laid on; for, as he quaintly observes, "the cries were satisfactory to me, without the sight of the strokes." He and the rest of the doctors found active exercise for such skill as they had, since fever and dysentery were making scarcely less havoc than the bullets at Ticonderoga. This came from the bad state of the camps and unwholesome food. The provincial surgeons seem to have been very little impressed with the importance of sanitary regulations, and to have thought it their business not to prevent disease, but only to cure it. The one grand essential in their eyes was a well-stocked medicine-chest, rich in exhaustless stores of rhubarb, ipecacuanha, and calomel. Even this sometimes failed. Colonel Williams reports "the sick destitute of everything proper for them; medicine-chest empty; nothing but their dirty blankets for beds; Dr. Ashley dead, Dr. Wright gone home, low enough; Bille worn off his legs,—such is our case. I have near a hundred sick. Lost a sergeant and a private last night."¹ Chaplain Cleaveland himself, though strong of frame, did not escape; but he found solace in his trouble from the congenial society of a brother chaplain, Mr. Emerson, of New Hampshire, "a right-down hearty Christian minister, of savory conversation," who came to see him in his tent, breakfasted with him, and joined him in prayer. Being somewhat better, he one day thought to recreate himself with the apostolic occupation of fishing. The sport was poor; the fish bit slowly; and as he lay in his boat, still languid with his malady, he had leisure to reflect on the contrasted works of Providence and man,—the bright lake basking amid its mountains, a dream of wilderness beauty, and the swarms of harsh humanity on the shore beside him, with their passions, discords, and miseries. But it was with the strong meat of Calvinistic theology, and not with reveries like these, that he was accustomed to nourish his military flock.

¹ Colonel William Williams to Colonel Israel Williams, 4 Sept. 1758.

While at one end of the lake the force of Abercromby was diminished by detachments and disease, that of Montcalm at the other was so increased by reinforcements that a forward movement on his part seemed possible. He contented himself, however, with strengthening the fort, reconstructing the lines that he had defended so well, and sending out frequent war-parties by way of Wood Creek and South Bay, to harass Abercromby's communications with Fort Edward. These parties, some of which consisted of several hundred men, were generally more or less successful; and one of them, under La Corne, surprised and destroyed a large wagon train escorted by forty soldiers. When Abercromby heard of it, he ordered Rogers, with a strong detachment of provincials, light infantry, and rangers, to go down the lake in boats, cross the mountains to the narrow waters of Lake Champlain, and cut off the enemy. But though Rogers set out at two in the morning, the French retreated so fast that he arrived too late. As he was on his way back, he was met by a messenger from the General with orders to intercept other French parties reported to be hovering about Fort Edward. On this he retraced his steps, marched through the forest to where Whitehall now stands, and thence made his way up Wood Creek to old Fort Anne, a relic of former wars, abandoned and falling to decay. Here, on the neglected "clearing" that surrounded the ruin, his followers encamped. They counted seven hundred in all, and consisted of about eighty rangers, a body of Connecticut men under Major Putnam, and a small regular force, chiefly light infantry, under Captain Dalzell, the brave officer who was afterwards killed by Pontiac's warriors at Detroit.

Up to this time Rogers had observed his usual caution, commanding silence on the march, and forbidding fires at night; but, seeing no signs of an enemy, he forgot himself; and on the following morning, the eighth of August, he and Lieutenant Irwin, of the light infantry, amused themselves by firing at a mark on a wager. The shots reached the ears of four hundred and fifty French and Indians under the famous partisan Marin, who at once took steps to reconnoitre and ambuscade his rash enemy. For nearly a mile from the old fort the forest had formerly been cut down and burned; and Nature had now begun to reassert herself, covering the open tract with a dense growth of bushes and saplings almost impervious to anything but a wild-cat, had it not been traversed by a narrow Indian path. Along this path the men were forced to march in single file. At about seven o'clock, when the two marksmen had decided their bet, and before the heavy dew of the night was dried upon the bushes, the party slung their packs and set out. Putnam was in the front with his Connecticut men; Dalzell followed with the regulars; and Rogers, with his rangers, brought up the rear of the long and slender line. Putnam himself led the way, shouldering through the bushes, gun in hand; and just as the bluff yeoman emerged from them to enter the forest-growth beyond, the air was rent with yells, the thickets before him were filled with Indians, and one of them, a Caughnawaga chief, sprang upon him, hatchet in hand. He had time to cock his gun and snap it at the breast of his assailant; but it missed fire, and he was instantly seized and dragged back into the forest, as were also a lieutenant named Tracy and three private men. Then the firing began. The French and Indians, lying across the path in a semicircle, had the advantage of position and surprise. The Connecticut men fell back among the bushes in disorder; but soon rallied, and held the enemy in check while Dalzell and Rogers — the latter of whom was nearly a mile behind — were struggling through briers and thickets to their aid. So close was the brushwood that it was full half an hour before they could get their followers ranged in some kind of order in front of the enemy; and even then each man was forced to fight for himself as best he could. Humphreys, the biographer of Putnam, blames Rogers severely for not coming at once to the aid of the Connecticut men; but two of their captains declare that he came with all possible speed; while a regular officer present highly praised him to Abercromby for cool and officer-like conduct.¹ As a man his deserts were small; as a bushfighter he was beyond reproach.

¹ Letter from the Camp at Lake George, 5 Sept. 1758, signed by Captains Maynard and Giddings, and printed in the Boston Weekly Advertiser. "Rogers deserves much to be commended." Abercromby to Pitt, 19 Aug. 1758.

Another officer recounts from hearsay the remarkable conduct of an Indian, who sprang into the midst of the English and killed two of them with his hatchet; then mounted on a log and defied them all. One of the regulars tried to knock him down with the butt of his musket; but though the blow made him bleed, he did not fall, and would have killed his assailant if Rogers had not shot him dead.¹ The firing lasted about two hours. At length some of the Canadians gave way, and the rest of the French and Indians followed.² They broke into small parties to elude pursuit, and reuniting towards evening, made their bivouac on a spot surrounded by impervious swamps.

Rogers remained on the field and buried all his own dead, forty-nine in number. Then he resumed his march to Fort Edward, carrying the wounded on litters of branches till the next day, when he met a detachment coming with wagons to his relief. A party sent out soon after for the purpose reported that they had found and buried more than a hundred French and Indians. From this time forward the war-parties from Ticonderoga greatly relented in their activity.

The adventures of the captured Putnam were sufficiently remarkable. The Indians, after dragging him to the rear, lashed him fast to a tree so that he could not move a limb, and a young savage amused himself by throwing a hatchet at his head, striking it into the wood as close as possible to the mark without hitting it. A French petty officer then thrust the muzzle of his gun violently against the prisoner's body, pretended to fire it at him, and at last struck him in the face with the butt; after which dastardly proceeding he left him. The French and Indians being forced after a time to fall back, Putnam found himself between the combatants and exposed to bullets from both sides; but the enemy, partially recovering the ground they had lost, unbound him, and led him to a safe distance from the fight. When the retreat began, the Indians hurried him along with them, stripped of coat, waistcoat, shoes, and stockings, his back burdened with as many packs of the wounded as could be piled upon it, and his wrists bound so tightly together that the pain became intense. In his torment he begged them to kill him; on which a French officer who was near persuaded them to untie his hands and take off some of the packs, and the chief who had captured him gave him a pair of moccasins to protect his lacerated feet. When they encamped at night, they prepared to burn him alive, stripped him naked, tied him to a tree, and gathered dry wood to pile about him. A sudden shower of rain interrupted their pastime; but when it was over they began again, and surrounded him with a circle of brushwood which they set on fire. As they were yelling and dancing their delight at the contortions with which he tried to avoid the rising flames, Marin, hearing what was going forward, broke through the crowd, and with a courageous humanity not too common among Canadian officers, dashed aside the burning brush, untied the prisoner, and angrily upbraided his tormentors. He then restored him to the chief who had captured him, and whose right of property in his prize the others had failed to respect. The Caughnawaga treated him at first with kindness; but, with the help of his tribesmen, took effectual means to prevent his escape, by laying him on his back, stretching his arms and legs in the form of a St. Andrew's cross, and binding the wrists and ankles fast to the stems of young trees. This was a mode of securing prisoners in vogue among Indians from immemorial time; but, not satisfied with it, they placed brushwood upon his body, and then laid across it the long slender stems of saplings, on the ends of which several warriors lay down to sleep, so that the slightest movement on his part would rouse them. Thus he passed a night of misery, which did not prevent him from thinking of the ludicrous figure he made in the hands of the tawny Philistines.

¹ Thomas Barnsley to Bouquet, 7 Sept. 1758.

² Doreil au Ministre, 31 Août, 1757.

On the next night, after a painful march, he reached Ticonderoga, where he was questioned by Montcalm, and afterwards sent to Montreal in charge of a French officer, who showed him the utmost kindness. On arriving, wofully tattered, bruised, scorched, and torn, he found a friend in Colonel Schuyler, himself a prisoner on parole, who helped him in his need, and through whose good offices the future major-general of the Continental Army was included in the next exchange of prisoners.¹

The petty victory over Marin was followed by a more substantial success. Early in September Abercromby's melancholy camp was cheered with the tidings that the important French post of Fort Frontenac, which controlled Lake Ontario, which had baffled Shirley in his attempt against Niagara, and given Montcalm the means of conquering Oswego, had fallen into British hands. "This is a glorious piece of news, and may God have all the glory of the same!" writes Chaplain Cleaveland in his Diary. Lieutenant-Colonel Bradstreet had planned the stroke long before, and proposed it first to Loudon, and then to Abercromby. Loudon accepted it; but his successor received it coldly, though Lord Howe was warm in its favor. At length, under the pressure of a council of war, Abercromby consented that the attempt should be made, and gave Bradstreet three thousand men, nearly all provincials. With these he made his way, up the Mohawk and down the Onondaga, to the lonely and dismal spot where Oswego had once stood. By dint of much persuasion a few Oneidas joined him; though, like most of the Five Nations, they had been nearly lost to the English through the effects of the defeat at Ticonderoga. On the twenty-second of August his fleet of whale-boats and bateaux pushed out on Lake Ontario; and, three days after, landed near the French fort. On the night of the twenty-sixth Bradstreet made a lodgment within less than two hundred yards of it; and early in the morning De Noyan, the commandant, surrendered himself and his followers, numbering a hundred and ten soldiers and laborers, prisoners of war. With them were taken nine armed vessels, carrying from eight to eighteen guns, and forming the whole French naval force on Lake Ontario. The crews escaped. An enormous quantity of provisions, naval stores, munitions, and Indian goods intended for the supply of the western posts fell into the hands of the English, who kept what they could carry off, and burned the rest. In the fort were found sixty cannon and sixteen mortars, which the victors used to batter down the walls; and then, reserving a few of the best, knocked off the trunnions of the others. The Oneidas were bent on scalping some of the prisoners. Bradstreet forbade it. They begged that he would do as the French did, — turn his back and shut his eyes; but he forced them to abstain from all violence, and consoled them by a lion's share of the plunder. In accordance with the orders of Abercromby, the fort was dismantled, and all the buildings in or around it burned, as were also the vessels, except the two largest, which were reserved to carry off some of the captured goods. Then, with boats deeply laden, the detachment returned to Oswego; where, after unloading and burning the two vessels, they proceeded towards Albany, leaving a thousand of their number at the new fort which Brigadier Stanwix was building at the Great Carrying Place of the Mohawk.

¹ On Putnam's adventures, Humphreys, 57 (1818). He had the story from Putnam himself, and seems to give it with substantial correctness, though his account of the battle is at several points erroneous. The "Molang" of his account is Marin. On the battle, besides authorities already cited, Recollections of Thomson Maxwell, a soldier present (Essex Institute, VII. 97). Rogers, Journals, 117. Letter from camp in Boston Gazette, no. 117. Another in New Hampshire Gazette, no. 104. Gentleman's Magazine, 1758, p. 498. Malartic, Journal du Régiment de Béarn. Lévis, Journal de la Guerre en Canada. The French notices of the affair are few and brief. They admit a defeat, but exaggerate the force and the losses of the English, and underrate their own. Malartic, however, says that Marin set out with four hundred men, and was soon after joined by an additional number of Indians; which nearly answers to the best English accounts.

Next to Louisbourg, this was the heaviest blow that the French had yet received. Their command of Lake Ontario was gone. New France was cut in two; and unless the severed parts could speedily reunite, all the posts of the interior would be in imminent jeopardy. If Bradstreet had been followed by another body of men to reoccupy and rebuild Oswego, thus recovering a harbor on Lake Ontario, all the captured French vessels could have been brought thither, and the command of this inland sea assured at once. Even as it was, the advantages were immense. A host of savage warriors, thus far inclined to France or wavering between the two belligerents, stood henceforth neutral, or gave themselves to England; while Fort Duquesne, deprived of the supplies on which it depended, could make but faint resistance to its advancing enemy.

Amherst, with five regiments from Louisbourg, came, early in October, to join Abercromby at Lake George, and the two commanders discussed the question of again attacking Ticonderoga. Both thought the season too late. A fortnight after, a deserter brought news that Montcalm was breaking up his camp. Abercromby followed his example. The opposing armies filed off each to its winter quarters, and only a few scouting parties kept alive the embers of war on the waters and mountains of Lake George.

Meanwhile Brigadier Forbes was climbing the Alleghanies, hewing his way through the forests of western Pennsylvania, and toiling inch by inch towards his goal of Fort Duquesne.¹

¹ On the capture of Fort Frontenac, Bradstreet to Abercromby, 31 Aug. 1758. Impartial Account of Lieutenant-Colonel Bradstreet's Expedition, by a Volunteer in the Expedition (London, 1759). Letter from a New York officer to his colonel, in Boston Gazette, no. 182. Several letters from persons in the expedition, in Boston Evening Post, no. 1,203, New Hampshire Gazette, no. 104, and Boston News Letter, no. 2,932. Abercromby to Pitt, 25 Nov. 1758. Lieutenant Macauley to Horatio Gates, 30 Aug. 1758. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 30 Oct. 1758. Pouchot, I. 162. Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760.

CHAPTER XXII.

1758.

FORT DUQUESNE.

DINWIDDIE AND WASHINGTON. — BRIGADIER FORBES. — HIS ARMY. — CONFLICTING VIEWS. — DIFFICULTIES. — ILLNESS OF FORBES. — HIS SUFFERINGS. — HIS FORTITUDE. — HIS DIFFERENCE WITH WASHINGTON. — SIR JOHN SINCLAIR. — TROUBLESOME ALLIES. — SCOUTING PARTIES. — BOASTS OF VAUDREUIL. — FORBES AND THE INDIANS. — MISSION OF CHRISTIAN FREDERIC POST. — COUNCIL OF PEACE. — SECOND MISSION OF POST. — DEFEAT OF GRANT. — DISTRESS OF FORBES. — DARK PROSPECTS. — ADVANCE OF THE ARMY. — CAPTURE OF THE FRENCH FORT. — THE SLAIN OF BRADDOCK'S FIELD. — DEATH OF FORBES.

DURING the last year Loudon, filled with vain schemes against Louisbourg, had left the French scalping-parties to their work of havoc on the western borders. In Virginia Washington still toiled at his hopeless task of defending with a single regiment a forest frontier of more than three hundred miles; and in Pennsylvania the Assembly thought more of quarrelling with their governor than of protecting the tormented settlers. Fort Duquesne, the source of all the evil, was left undisturbed. In vain Washington urged the futility of defensive war, and the necessity of attacking the enemy in his stronghold. His position, trying at the best, was made more so by the behavior of Dinwiddie. That crusty Scotchman had conceived a dislike to him, and sometimes treated him in a manner that must have been unspeakably galling to the proud and passionate young man, who nevertheless, unconquerable in his sense of public duty, curbed himself to patience, or the semblance of it.

Dinwiddie was now gone, and a new governor had taken his place. The conduct of the war, too, had changed, and in the plans of Pitt the capture of Fort Duquesne held an important place. Brigadier John Forbes was charged with it. He was a Scotch veteran, forty-eight years of age, who had begun life as a student of medicine, and who ended it as an able and faithful soldier. Though a well-bred man of the world, his tastes were simple; he detested ceremony, and dealt frankly and plainly with the colonists, who both respected and liked him. In April he was in Philadelphia waiting for his army, which as yet had no existence; for the provincials were not enlisted, and an expected battalion of Highlanders had not arrived. It was the end of June before they were all on the march; and meanwhile the General was attacked with a painful and dangerous malady, which would have totally disabled a less resolute man.

His force consisted of provincials from Pennsylvania, Virginia, Maryland, and North Carolina, with twelve hundred Highlanders of Montgomery's regiment and a detachment of Royal Americans, amounting in all, with wagoners and camp followers, to between six and seven thousand men. The Royal American regiment was a new corps raised, in the colonies, largely from among the Germans of Pennsylvania. Its officers were from Europe ; and conspicuous among them was Lieutenant-Colonel Henry Bouquet, a brave and accomplished Swiss, who commanded one of the four battalions of which the regiment was composed. Early in July he was encamped with the advance-guard at the hamlet of Raystown, now the town of Bedford, among the eastern heights of the Alleghanies. Here his tents were pitched in an opening of the forest by the banks of a small stream ; and Virginians in hunting-shirts, Highlanders in kilt and plaid, and Royal Americans in regulation scarlet, labored at throwing up intrenchments and palisades, while around stood the silent mountains in their mantles of green.

Now rose the question whether the army should proceed in a direct course to Fort Duquesne, hewing a new road through the forest, or march thirty-four miles to Fort Cumberland, and thence follow the road made by Braddock. It was the interest of Pennsylvania that Forbes should choose the former route, and of Virginia that he should choose the latter. The Old Dominion did not wish to see a highway cut for her rival to those rich lands of the Ohio which she called her own. Washington, who was then at Fort Cumberland with a part of his regiment, was earnest for the old road ; and in an interview with Bouquet midway between that place and Raystown, he spared no effort to bring him to the same opinion. But the quartermaster-general, Sir John Sinclair, who was supposed to know the country, had advised the Pennsylvania route ; and both Bouquet and Forbes were resolved to take it.

It was shorter, and when once made would furnish readier and more abundant supplies of food and forage; but to make it would consume a vast amount of time and labor. Washington foretold the ruin of the expedition unless it took Braddock's road. Ardent Virginian as he was, there is no cause to believe that his decision was based on any but military reasons; but Forbes thought otherwise, and found great fault with him. Bouquet did him more justice. "Colonel Washington," he writes to the General, "is filled with a sincere zeal to aid the expedition, and is ready to march with equal activity by whatever way you choose."

The fate of Braddock had impressed itself on all the army, and inspired a caution that was but too much needed; since, except Washington's men and a few others among the provincials, the whole, from general to drummer-boy, were total strangers to that insidious warfare of the forest in which their enemies, red and white, had no rival. Instead of marching, like Braddock, at one stretch for Fort Duquesne, burdened with a long and cumbersome baggage-train, it was the plan of Forbes to push on by slow stages, establishing fortified magazines as he went, and at last, when within easy distance of the fort, to advance upon it with all his force, as little impeded as possible with wagons and pack-horses. He bore no likeness to his predecessor, except in determined resolution, and he did not hesitate to embrace military heresies which would have driven Braddock to fury. To Bouquet, in whom he placed a well-merited trust, he wrote,

“I have been long in your opinion of equipping numbers of our men like the savages, and I fancy Colonel Burd, of Virginia, has most of his best people equipped in that manner. In this country we must learn the art of war from enemy Indians, or anybody else who has seen it carried on here.”

His provincials displeased him, not without reason; for the greater part were but the crudest material for an army, unruly, and recalcitrant to discipline. Some of them came to the rendezvous at Carlisle with old province muskets, the locks tied on with a string; others brought fowling-pieces of their own, and others carried nothing but walking-sticks; while many had never fired a gun in their lives.¹ Forbes reported to Pitt that their officers, except a few in the higher ranks, were “an extremely bad collection of broken inn-keepers, horse-jockeys, and Indian traders;” nor is he more flattering towards the men, though as to some of them he afterwards changed his mind.²

While Bouquet was with the advance at Rays-town, Forbes was still in Philadelphia, trying to bring the army into shape, and collecting provisions, horses, and wagons; much vexed meantime by the Assembly, whose tedious disputes about taxing the proprietaries greatly obstructed the service. “No sergeant or quartermaster of a regiment,” he says, “is obliged to look into more details than I am; and if I did not see to everything myself, we should never get out of this town.” July had begun before he could reach the frontier village of Carlisle, where he found everything in confusion. After restoring some order, he wrote to Bouquet: "I have been and still am but poorly, with a cursed flux, but shall move day after to-morrow." He was doomed to disappointment; and it was not till the ninth of August that he sent another letter from the same place to the same military friend. "I am now able to write after three weeks of a most violent and tormenting distemper, which, thank God, seems now much abated as to pain, but has left me as weak as a new-born infant. However, I hope to have strength enough to set out from this place on Friday next." The disease was an inflammation of the stomach and other vital organs; and when he should have been in bed, with complete repose of body and mind, he was racked continually with the toils and worries of a most arduous campaign.

¹ Correspondence of Forbes and Bouquet, July, August, 1758.

² Forbes to Pitt, 6 Sept. 1758.

He left Carlisle on the eleventh, carried on a kind of litter made of a hurdle slung between two horses; and two days later he wrote from Shippensburg: "My journey here from Carlisle raised my disorder and pains to so intolerable a degree that I was obliged to stop, and may not get away for a day or two." Again, on the eighteenth: "I am better, and partly free from the excruciating pain I suffered; but still so weak that I can scarce bear motion." He lay helpless at Shippensburg till September was well advanced. On the second he says: "I really cannot describe how I have suffered both in body and mind of late, and the relapses have been worse as the disappointment was greater;" and on the fourth, still writing to Bouquet, who in the camp at Raystown was struggling with many tribulations: "I am sorry you have met with so many cross accidents to vex you, and have such a parcel of scoundrels as the provincials to work with; mais le vin est tiré, and you must drop a little of the gentleman and treat them as they deserve. Seal and send off the enclosed despatch to Sir John by some sure hand. He is a very odd man, and I am sorry it has been my fate to have any concern with him. I am afraid our army will not admit of division, lest one half meet with a check; therefore I would consult Colonel Washington, though perhaps not follow his advice, as his behavior about the roads was noways like a soldier. I thank my good cousin for his letter, and have only to say that I have all my life been subject to err; but I now reform, as I go to bed at eight at night, if able to sit up so late."

Nobody can read the letters of Washington at this time without feeling that the imputations of Forbes were unjust, and that here, as elsewhere, his ruling motive was the public good.¹ Forbes himself, seeing the rugged and difficult nature of the country, began to doubt whether after all he had not better have chosen the old road of Braddock. He soon had an interview with its chief advocates, the two Virginia colonels, Washington and Burd, and reported the result to Bouquet, adding: "I told them that, whatever they thought, I had acted on the best information to be had, and could safely say for myself, and believed I might answer for you, that the good of the service was all we had at heart, not valuing provincial interests, jealousies, or suspicions one single twopence." It must be owned that, considering the slow and sure mode of advance which he had wisely adopted, the old soldier was probably right in his choice; since before the army could reach Fort Duquesne, the autumnal floods would have made the Youghiogany and the Monongahela impassable.

¹ Besides the printed letters, there is an autograph collection of his correspondence with Bouquet in 1758 (forming vol. 21,641, Additional Manuscripts, British Museum). Copies of the whole are before me.

The Sir John mentioned by Forbes was the quartermaster-general, Sir John Sinclair, who had gone forward with Virginians and other troops from the camp of Bouquet to make the road over the main range of the Alleghanies, whence he sent back the following memorandum of his requirements: "Pickaxes, crowes, and shovels; likewise more whiskey. Send me the newspapers, and tell my black to send me a candlestick and half a loaf of sugar." He was extremely inefficient; and Forbes, out of all patience with him, wrote confidentially to Bouquet that his only talent was for throwing everything into confusion. Yet he found fault with everybody else, and would discharge volleys of oaths at all who met his disapproval. From this cause or some other, Lieutenant-Colonel Stephen, of the Virginians, told him that he would break his sword rather than be longer under his orders. "As I had not sufficient strength," says Sinclair, "to take him by the neck from among his own men, I was obliged to let him have his own way, that I might not be the occasion of bloodshed." He succeeded at last in arresting him, and Major Lewis, of the same regiment, took his place.

The aid of Indians as scouts and skirmishers was of the last importance to an army so weak in the arts of woodcraft, and efforts were made to engage the services of the friendly Cherokees and Catawbas, many of whom came to the camp, where their caprice, insolence, and rapacity tried to the utmost the patience of the commanders. That of Sir John Sinclair had already been overcome by his dealings with the provincial authorities; and he wrote in good French, at the tail of a letter to the Swiss colonel: "Adieu, my dear Bouquet. The greatest curse that our Lord can pronounce against the worst of sinners is to give them business to do with provincial commissioners and friendly Indians." A band of sixty warriors told Colonel Burd that they would join the army on condition that it went by Braddock's road. "This," wrote Forbes, on hearing of the proposal, "is a new system of military discipline truly, and shows that my good friend Burd is either made a cat's-foot of himself, or little knows me if he imagines that sixty scoundrels are to direct me in my measures."¹ Bouquet, with a pliant tact rarely seen in the born Briton, took great pains to please these troublesome allies, and went so far as to adopt one of them as his son.¹ A considerable number joined the army; but they nearly all went off when the stock of presents provided for them was exhausted.

¹ The above extracts are from the Bouquet and Haldimand Papers, British Museum.

Forbes was in total ignorance of the strength and movements of the enemy. The Indians reported their numbers to be at least equal to his own; but nothing could be learned from them with certainty, by reason of their inveterate habit of lying. Several scouting-parties of whites were therefore sent forward, of which the most successful was that of a young Virginian officer, accompanied by a sergeant and five Indians. At a little distance from the French fort, the Indians stopped to paint themselves and practise incantations. The chief warrior of the party then took certain charms from an otter-skin bag and tied them about the necks of the other Indians. On that of the officer he hung the otter-skin itself; while to the sergeant he gave a small packet of paint from the same mystic receptacle. "He told us," reports the officer, "that none of us could be shot, for those things would turn the balls from us; and then shook hands with us, and told us to go and fight like men." Thus armed against fate, they mounted the high ground afterwards called Grant's Hill, where, covered by trees and bushes, they had a good view of the fort, and saw plainly that the reports of the French force were greatly exaggerated.²

¹ Bouquet to Forbes, 3 June, 1758.

² Journal of a Reconnoitring Party, Aug. 1758. The writer seems to have been Ensign Chew, of Washington's regiment.

Meanwhile Bouquet's men pushed on the heavy work of road-making up the main range of the Alleghanies, and, what proved far worse, the parallel mountain ridge of Laurel Hill, hewing, digging, blasting, laying fascines and gabions to support the track along the sides of steep declivities, or worming their way like moles through the jungle of swamp and forest. Forbes described the country to Pitt as an "immense uninhabited wilderness, overgrown everywhere with trees and brushwood, so that nowhere can one see twenty yards." In truth, as far as eye or mind could reach, a prodigious forest vegetation spread its impervious canopy over hill, valley, and plain, and wrapped the stern and awful waste in the shadows of the tomb.

Having secured his magazines at Raystown, and built a fort there named Fort Bedford, Bouquet made a forward movement of some forty miles, crossed the main Alleghany and Laurel Hill, and, taking post on a stream called Loyalhannon Creek, began another depot of supplies as a base for the final advance on Fort Duquesne, which was scarcely fifty miles distant.

Vaudreuil had learned from prisoners the march of Forbes, and, with his usual egotism, announced to the Colonial Minister what he had done in consequence. "I have provided for the safety of Fort Duquesne." "I have sent reinforcements to M. de Ligneris, who commands there." "I have done the impossible to supply him with provisions, and I am now sending them in abundance, in order that the troops I may perhaps have occasion to send to drive off the English may not be delayed." "A stronger fort is needed on the Ohio; but I cannot build one till after the peace; then I will take care to build such a one as will thenceforth keep the English out of that country." Some weeks later he was less confident, and very anxious for news from Ligneris. He says that he has sent him all the succors he could, and ordered troops to go to his aid from Niagara, Detroit, and Illinois, as well as the militia of Detroit, with the Indians there and elsewhere in the West, — Hurons, Ottawas, Pottawattamies, Miamis, and other tribes. What he fears is that the English will not attack the fort till all these Indians have grown tired of waiting, and have gone home again.¹ This was precisely the intention of Forbes, and the chief object of his long delays.

He had another good reason for making no haste. There was hope that the Delawares and Shawanoes, who lived within easy reach of Fort Duquesne, and who for the past three years had spread havoc throughout the English border, might now be won over from the French alliance. Forbes wrote to Bouquet from Shippensburg: "After many intrigues with Quakers, the Provincial Commissioners, the Governor, etc., and by the downright bullying of Sir William Johnson, I hope I have now brought about a general convention of the Indians."² The convention was to include the Five

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, Juillet, Août, Octobre 1758.

² Forbes to Bouquet, 18 Aug. 1758.

Nations, the Delawares, the Shawanoes, and other tribes, who had accepted wampum belts of invitation, and promised to meet the Governor and Commissioners of the various provinces at the town of Easton, before the middle of September. This seeming miracle was wrought by several causes. The Indians in the French interest, always greedy for presents, had not of late got enough to satisfy them. Many of those destined for them had been taken on the way from France by British cruisers, and the rest had passed through the hands of official knaves, who sold the greater part for their own profit. Again, the goods supplied by French fur-traders were few and dear; and the Indians remembered with regret the abundance and comparative cheapness of those they had from the English before the war. At the same time it was reported among them that a British army was marching to the Ohio strong enough to drive out the French from all that country; and the Delawares and Shawanoes of the West began to waver in their attachment to the falling cause. The eastern Delawares, living at Wyoming and elsewhere on the upper Susquehanna, had made their peace with the English in the summer before; and their great chief, Teedyuscung, thinking it for his interest that the tribes of the Ohio should follow his example, sent them wampum belts, inviting them to lay down the hatchet. The Five Nations, with Johnson at one end of the Confederacy and Joncaire at the other, — the one cajoling them in behalf of England, and the other in behalf of France, — were still divided in counsel ; but even among the Senecas, the tribe most under Joncaire's influence, there was a party so far inclined to England that, like the Delaware chief, they sent wampum to the Ohio, inviting peace. But the influence most potent in reclaiming the warriors of the West was of a different kind. Christian Frederic Post, a member of the Moravian brotherhood, had been sent at the instance of Forbes as an envoy to the hostile tribes from the Governor and Council of Pennsylvania. He spoke the Delaware language, knew the Indians well, had lived among them, had married a converted squaw, and, by his simplicity of character, directness, and perfect honesty, gained their full confidence. He now accepted his terrible mission, and calmly prepared to place himself in the clutches of the tiger. He was a plain German, upheld by a sense of duty and a single-hearted trust in God ; alone, with no great disciplined organization to impel and support him, and no visions and illusions such as kindled and sustained the splendid heroism of the early Jesuit martyrs. Yet his errand was no whit less perilous. And here we may notice the contrast between the mission settlements of the Moravians in Pennsylvania and those which the later Jesuits and the Sulpitians had established at Caughnawaga, St. Francis, La Présentation, and other places. The Moravians were apostles of peace, and they succeeded to a surprising degree in weaning their converts from their ferocious instincts and warlike habits ; while the Mission Indians of Canada retained all their native fierceness, and were systematically impelled to use their tomahawks against the enemies of the Church. Their wigwams were hung with scalps, male and female, adult and infant; and these so-called missions were but nests of baptized savages, who wore the crucifix instead of the medicine-bag, and were encouraged by the Government for purposes of war.¹

The Moravian envoy made his way to the Delaware town of Kushkushkee, on Beaver Creek, northwest of Fort Duquesne, where the three chiefs known as King Beaver, Shingas, and Delaware George received him kindly, and conducted him to another town on the same stream. Here his reception was different. A crowd of warriors, their faces distorted with rage, surrounded him, brandishing knives and threatening to kill him; but others took his part, and, order being at last restored, he read them his message from the Governor, which seemed to please them. They insisted, however, that he should go with them to Fort Duquesne, in order that the Indians assembled there might hear it also. Against this dangerous proposal he protested in vain. On arriving near the fort, the French demanded that he should be given up to them, and, being refused, offered a great reward for his scalp; on which his friends advised him to keep close by the camp-fire, as parties were out with intent to kill him. "Accordingly," says Post, "I stuck to the fire as if I had been chained there. On the next day the Indians, with a great many French officers, came out to hear what I had to say. The officers brought with them a table, pens, ink, and paper. I spoke in the midst of them with a free conscience, and perceived by their looks that they were not pleased with what I said." The substance of his message was an invitation to the Indians to renew the old chain of friendship, joined with a warning that an English army was on its way to drive off the French, and that they would do well to stand neutral.

¹ Of the Hurons of the mission of Lorette, Bougainville says: "Ils sont toujours sauvages autant que ceux qui sont les moins apprivoisés." And yet they had been converts under Jesuit control for more than four generations. The case was no better at the other missions; and at St. Francis it seems to have been worse.

He addressed an audience filled with an inordinate sense of their own power and importance, believing themselves greater and braver than either of the European nations, and yet deeply jealous of both. "We have heard," they said, "that the French and English mean to kill all the Indians and divide the land among themselves." And on this string they harped continually. If they had known their true interest, they would have made no peace with the English, but would have united as one man to form a barrier of fire against their farther progress; for the West in English hands meant farms, villages, cities, the ruin of the forest, the extermination of the game, and the expulsion of those who lived on it; while the West in French hands meant but scattered posts of war and trade, with the native tribes cherished as indispensable allies.

After waiting some days, the three tribes of the Delawares met in council, and made their answer to the message brought by Post. It was worthy of a proud and warlike race, and was to the effect that since their brothers of Pennsylvania wished to renew the old peace-chain, they on their part were willing to do so, provided that the wampum belt should be sent them in the name, not of Pennsylvania alone, but of the rest of the provinces also.

Having now accomplished his errand, Post wished to return home; but the Indians were seized with an access of distrust, and would not let him go. This jealousy redoubled when they saw him writing in his notebook. "It is a troublesome cross and heavy yoke to draw this people," he says; "they can punish and squeeze a body's heart to the utmost. There came some together and examined me about what I had wrote yesterday. I told them I writ what was my duty. 'Brothers, I tell you I am not afraid of you. I have a good conscience before God and man. I tell you, brothers, there is a bad spirit in your hearts, which breeds jealousy, and will keep you ever in fear.'" At last they let him go; and, eluding a party that lay in wait for his scalp, he journeyed twelve days through the forest, and reached Fort Augusta with the report of his mission.¹

As the result of it, a great convention of white men and red was held at Easton in October.

¹ Journal of Christian Frederic Post, July, August, September, 1758.

The neighboring provinces had been asked to send their delegates, and some of them did so; while belts of invitation were sent to the Indians far and near. Sir William Johnson, for reasons best known to himself, at first opposed the plan; but was afterwards led to favor it and to induce tribes under his influence to join in the grand pacification. The Five Nations, with the smaller tribes lately admitted into their confederacy, the Delawares of the Susquehanna, the Mohegans, and several kindred bands, all had their representatives at the meeting. The conferences lasted nineteen days, with the inevitable formalities of such occasions, and the weary repetition of conventional metaphors and long-winded speeches. At length, every difficulty being settled, the Governor of Pennsylvania, in behalf of all the English, rose with a wampum belt in his hand, and addressed the tawny congregation thus: "By this belt we heal your wounds; we remove your grief; we take the hatchet out of your heads; we make a hole in the earth, and bury it so deep that nobody can dig it up again." Then, laying the first belt before them, he took another, very large, made of white wampum beads, in token of peace: "By this belt we renew all our treaties; we brighten the chain of friendship; we put fresh earth to the roots of the tree of peace, that it may bear up against every storm, and live and flourish while the sun shines and the rivers run." And he gave them the belt with the request that they would send it to their friends and allies, and invite them to take hold also of the chain of friendship. Accordingly all present agreed on a joint message of peace to the tribes of the Ohio.¹

Frederic Post, with several white and Indian companions, was chosen to bear it. A small escort of soldiers that attended him as far as the Alleghany was cut to pieces on its return by a band of the very warriors to whom he was carrying his offers of friendship; and other tenants of the grim and frowning wilderness met the invaders of their domain with inhospitable greetings. "The wolves made a terrible music this night," he writes at his first bivouac after leaving Loyalhannon. When he reached the Delaware towns his reception was ominous. The young warriors said: "Anybody can see with half an eye that the English only mean to cheat us. Let us knock the messengers in the head." Some of them had attacked an English outpost, and had been repulsed; hence, in the words of Post, "They were possessed with a murdering spirit, and with bloody vengeance were thirsty and drunk. I said: 'As God has stopped the mouths of the lions that they could not devour Daniel, so he will preserve us from their fury.'" The chiefs and elders were of a different mind from their fierce and capricious young men. They met during the evening in the log-house where Post and his party lodged; and here a French officer presently arrived with a string of wampum from the commandant, inviting them to help him drive back the army of Forbes.

¹ Minutes of Conferences at Easton, October, 1758.

The string was scornfully rejected. "They kicked it from one to another as if it were a snake. Captain Peter took a stick, and with it flung the string from one end of the room to the other, and said: 'Give it to the French captain; he boasted of his fighting, now let us see him fight. We have often ventured our lives for him, and got hardly a loaf of bread in return; and now he thinks we shall jump to serve him.' Then we saw the French captain mortified to the uttermost. He looked as pale as death. The Indians discoursed and joked till midnight, and the French captain sent messengers at midnight to Fort Duquesne."

There was a grand council, at which the French officer was present; and Post delivered the peace message from the council at Easton, along with another with which Forbes had charged him. "The messages pleased all the hearers except the French captain. He shook his head in bitter grief, and often changed countenance. Isaac Still [an Indian] ran him down with great boldness, and pointed at him, saying, 'There he sits!' They all said: 'The French always deceived us!' pointing at the French captain; who, bowing down his head, turned quite pale, and could look no one in the face. All the Indians began to mock and laugh at him. He could hold it no longer, and went out."¹

The overtures of peace were accepted, and the Delawares, Shawanoes, and Mingoes were no longer enemies of the English. The loss was the more disheartening to the French, since, some weeks before, they had gained a success which they hoped would confirm the adhesion of all their wavering allies. Major Grant, of the Highlanders, had urged Bouquet to send him to reconnoitre Fort Duquesne, capture prisoners, and strike a blow that would animate the assailants and discourage the assailed. Bouquet, forgetting his usual prudence, consented; and Grant set out from the camp at Loyallhannon with about eight hundred men, Highlanders, Royal Americans, and provincials. On the fourteenth of September, at two in the morning, he reached the top of the rising ground thenceforth called Grant's Hill, half a mile or more from the French fort. The forest and the darkness of the night hid him completely from the enemy. He ordered Major Lewis, of the Virginians, to take with him half the detachment, descend to the open plain before the fort, and attack the Indians known to be encamped there; after which he was to make a feigned retreat to the hill, where the rest of the troops were to lie in ambush and receive the pursuers. Lewis set out on his errand, while Grant waited anxiously for the result. Dawn was near, and all was silent; till at length Lewis returned, and incensed his commander by declaring that his men had lost their way in the dark woods, and fallen into such confusion that the attempt was impracticable. The morning twilight now began, but the country was wrapped in thick fog. Grant abandoned his first plan, and sent a few Highlanders into the cleared ground to burn a warehouse that had been seen there. He was convinced that the French and their Indians were too few to attack him, though their numbers in fact were far greater than his own.¹ Infatuated with this idea, and bent on taking prisoners, he had the incredible rashness to divide his force in such a way that the several parts could not support each other. Lewis, with two hundred men, was sent to guard the baggage two miles in the rear, where a company of Virginians, under Captain Bullitt, was already stationed. A hundred Pennsylvanians were posted far off on the right, towards the Alleghany, while Captain Mackenzie, with a detachment of Highlanders, was sent to the left, towards the Monongahela. Then, the fog having cleared a little, Captain Macdonald, with another company of Highlanders, was ordered into the open plain to reconnoitre the fort and make a plan of it, Grant himself remaining on the hill with a hundred of his own regiment and a company of Maryland men. "In order to put on a good countenance," he says, "and convince our men they had no reason to be afraid, I gave directions to our drums to beat the reveille. The troops were in an advantageous post, and I must own I thought we had nothing to fear." Macdonald was at this time on the plain, midway between the woods and the fort, and in full sight of it. The roll of the drums from the hill was answered by a burst of war-whoops, and the French came swarming out like hornets, many of them in their shirts, having just leaped from their beds. They all rushed upon Macdonald and his men, who met them with a volley that checked their advance; on which they surrounded him at a distance, and tried to cut off his retreat. The Highlanders broke through, and gained the woods, with the loss of their commander, who was shot dead. A crowd of French followed close, and soon put them to rout, driving them and Mackenzie's party back to the hill where Grant was posted. Here there was a hot fight in the forest, lasting about three quarters of an hour. At length the force of numbers, the novelty of the situation, and the appalling yells of the Canadians and Indians, completely overcame the Highlanders, so intrepid in the ordinary situations of war. They broke away in a wild and disorderly retreat. "Fear," says Grant, "got the better of every other passion; and I trust I shall never again see such a panic among troops."

¹ Journal of Christian Frederic Post, October, November, 1758.

¹ Grant to Forbes, no date. "Les rapports sur le nombre des Français varient de 3,000 à 1,200." Bouquet à Forbes, 17 Sept. 1758. Bigot says that 3,500 daily rations were delivered at Fort Duquesne throughout the summer. Bigot au Ministre, 22 Nov. 1758. In October the number had fallen to 1,180, which included Indians. Ligneris à Vaudreuil, 18 Oct 1758.

His only hope was in the detachment he had sent to the rear under Lewis to guard the baggage. But Lewis and his men, when they heard the firing in front, had left their post and pushed forward to help their comrades, taking a straight course through the forest; while Grant was retreating along the path by which he had advanced the night before.

Thus they missed each other; and when Grant reached the spot where he expected to find Lewis, he saw to his dismay that nobody was there but Captain Bullitt and his company. He cried in despair that he was a ruined man; not without reason, for the whole body of French and Indians was upon him. Such of his men as held together were forced towards the Alleghany, and, writes Bouquet, "would probably have been cut to pieces but for Captain Bullitt and his Virginians, who kept up the fight against the whole French force till two thirds of them were killed." They were offered quarter, but refused it; and the survivors were driven at last into the Alleghany, where some were drowned, and others swam over and escaped. Grant was surrounded and captured, and Lewis, who presently came up, was also made prisoner, along with some of his men, after a stiff resistance. Thus ended this mismanaged affair, which cost the English two hundred and seventy three killed, wounded, and taken. The rest got back safe to Loyalhannon.¹

The invalid General was deeply touched by this reverse, yet expressed himself with a moderation that does him honor. He wrote to Bouquet from Raystown: "Your letter of the seventeenth I read with no less surprise than concern, as I could not believe that such an attempt would have been made without my knowledge and concurrence. The breaking in upon our fair and flattering hopes of success touches me most sensibly. There are two wounded Highland officers just now arrived, who give so lame an account of the matter that one can draw nothing from them, only that my friend Grant most certainly lost his wits, and by his thirst of fame brought on his own perdition, and ran great risk of ours.”¹

¹ On Grant's defeat, Grant to Forbes, no date, a long and minute report, written while a prisoner. Bouquet à Forbes, 17 Sept. 1758. Forbes to Pitt, 20 Oct. 1758. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 1 Nov. 1758. Letters from camp in Boston Evening Post, Boston Weekly Advertiser, Boston News Letter, and other provincial newspapers of the time. List of Killed, Wounded, and Missing in the Action of Sept. 14. Gentleman's Magazine, XXIX. 173. Hazard's Pennsylvania Register, VIII. 141. Olden Time, I. 179. Vaudreuil, with characteristic exaggeration, represents all Grant's party as killed or taken, except a few who died of starvation. The returns show that 540 came back safe, out of 813.

The French pushed their advantage with spirit. Early in October a large body of them hovered in the woods about the camp at Loyalhannon, drove back a detachment sent against them, approached under cover of the trees, and, though beaten off, withdrew deliberately, after burying their dead and killing great numbers of horses and cattle.² But, with all their courageous energy, their position was desperate. The militia of Louisiana and the Illinois left the fort in November and went home; the Indians of Detroit and the Wabash would stay no longer; and, worse yet, the supplies destined for Fort Duquesne had been destroyed by Bradstreet at Fort Frontenac. Hence Ligneris was compelled by prospective starvation to dismiss the greater part of his force, and await the approach of his enemy with those that remained.

¹ Forbes to Bouquet, 23 Sept. 1758.

² Burd to Bouquet, 12 Oct. 1758. Bouquet à Forbes, 13 Oct. 1758. Forbes to Pitt, 20 Oct. 1758. Letter from Loyalhannon, 14 Oct., in Olden Time, I. 180. Letters from camp, in Boston News Letter. Ligneris à Vaudreuil, 18 Oct. 1758. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 20 Nov. 1758.

His enemy was in a plight hardly better than his own. Autumnal rains, uncommonly heavy and persistent, had ruined the newly-cut road. On the mountains the torrents tore it up, and in the valleys the wheels of the wagons and cannon churned it into soft mud. The horses, overworked and underfed, were fast breaking down. The forest had little food for them, and they were forced to drag their own oats and corn, as well as supplies for the army, through two hundred miles of wilderness. In the wretched condition of the road this was no longer possible. The magazines of provisions formed at Raystown and Loyalhannon to support the army on its forward march were emptied faster than they could be filled. Early in October the elements relented; the clouds broke, the sky was bright again, and the sun shone out in splendor on mountains radiant in the livery of autumn. A gleam of hope revisited the heart of Forbes. It was but a flattering illusion. The sullen clouds returned, and a chill, impenetrable veil of mist and rain hid the mountains and the trees. Dejected Nature wept and would not be comforted. Above, below, around, all was trickling, oozing, pattering, gushing. In the miserable encampments the starved horses stood steaming in the rain, and the men crouched, disgusted, under their dripping tents, while the drenched picket-guard in the neighboring forest paced dolefully through black mire and spongy mosses. The rain turned to snow; the descending flakes clung to the many-colored foliage, or melted from sight in the trench of half-liquid clay that was called a road. The wheels of the wagons sank in it to the hub, and to advance or retreat was alike impossible.

Forbes from his sick bed at Raystown wrote to Bouquet: "Your description of the road pierces me to the very soul." And a few days later to Pitt: "I am in the greatest distress, occasioned by rains unusual at this season, which have rendered the clay roads absolutely impracticable. If the weather does not favor, I shall be absolutely locked up in the mountains. I cannot form any judgment how I am to extricate myself, as everything depends on the weather, which snows and rains frightfully." There was no improvement. In the next week he writes to Bouquet: "These four days of constant rain have completely ruined the road. The wagons would cut it up more in an hour than we could repair in a week. I have written to General Abercromby, but have not had one scrape of a pen from him since the beginning of September; so it looks as if we were either forgot or left to our fate."¹ Wasted and tortured by disease, the perplexed commander was forced to burden himself with a multitude of details which would else have been neglected, and to do the work of commissary and quartermaster as well as general. "My time," he writes, "is disagreeably spent between business and medicine."

In the beginning of November he was carried to Loyalhannon, where the whole army was then gathered. There was a council of officers, and they resolved to attempt nothing more that season ; but, a few days later, three prisoners were brought in who reported the defenceless condition of the French, on which Forbes gave orders to advance again. The wagons and all the artillery, except a few light pieces, were left behind ; and on the eighteenth of November twenty-five hundred picked men marched for Fort Duquesne, without tents or baggage, and burdened only with knapsacks and blankets. Washington and Colonel Armstrong, of the Pennsylvanians, had opened a way for them by cutting a road to within a day's march of the French fort. On the evening of the twenty-fourth, the detachment encamped among the hills of Turkey Creek ; and the men on guard heard at midnight a dull and heavy sound booming over the western woods. Was it a magazine exploded by accident, or were the French blowing up their works ? In the morning the march was resumed, a strong advance-guard leading the way. Forbes came next, carried in his litter ; and the troops followed in three parallel columns, the Highlanders in the centre under Montgomery, their colonel, and the Royal Americans and provincials on the right and left, under Bouquet and Washington.¹ Thus, guided by the tap of the drum at the head of each column, they moved slowly through the forest, over damp, fallen leaves, crisp with frost, beneath an endless entanglement of bare gray twigs that sighed and moaned in the bleak November wind. It was dusk when they emerged upon the open plain and saw Fort Duquesne before them, with its background of wintry hills beyond the Monongahela and the Alleghany. During the last three miles they had passed the scattered bodies of those slain two months before at the defeat of Grant; and it is said that, as they neared the fort, the Highlanders were goaded to fury at seeing the heads of their slaughtered comrades stuck on poles, round which the kilts were hung derisively, in imitation of petticoats. Their rage was vain; the enemy was gone. Only a few Indians lingered about the place, who reported that the garrison, to the number of four or five hundred, had retreated, some down the Ohio, some overland towards Presquisle, and the rest, with their commander, up the Alleghany to Venango, called by the French, Fort Machault. They had burned the barracks and storehouses, and blown up the fortifications.

¹ Forbes to Bouquet, 15 Oct. 1758. Ibid., 25 Oct. 1758. Forbes to Pitt, 20 Oct. 1758.

¹ Letter from a British Officer in the Expedition, 25 Feb. 1759, Gentleman's Magazine, XXIX. 171.

The first care of the victors was to provide defence and shelter for those of their number on whom the dangerous task was to fall of keeping what they had won. A stockade was planted around a cluster of traders' cabins and soldiers' huts, which Forbes named Pittsburg, in honor of the great minister. It was not till the next autumn that General Stanwix built, hard by, the regular fortified work called Fort Pitt.¹ Captain West, brother of Benjamin West, the painter, led a detachment of Pennsylvanians, with Indian guides, through the forests of the Monongahela, to search for the bones of those who had fallen under Braddock. In the heart of the savage wood they found them in abundance, gnawed by wolves and foxes, and covered with the dead leaves of four successive autumns. Major Halket, of Forbes' staff, had joined the party; and, with the help of an Indian who was in the fight, he presently found two skeletons lying under a tree. In one of them he recognized, by a peculiarity of the teeth, the remains of his father, Sir Peter Halket, and in the other he believed that he saw the bones of a brother who had fallen at his father's side. The young officer fainted at the sight. The two skeletons were buried together, covered with a Highland plaid, and the Pennsylvanian woodsmen fired a volley over the grave. The rest of the bones were undistinguishable; and, being carefully gathered up, they were all interred in a deep trench dug in the freezing ground.¹

¹ Stanwix to Pitt, 20 Nov. 1759.

The work of the new fort was pushed on apace, and the task of holding it for the winter was assigned to Lieutenant-Colonel Mercer, of the Virginians, with two hundred provincials. The number was far too small. It was certain that, unless vigorously prevented by a counter attack, the French would gather in early spring from all their nearer western posts, Niagara, Detroit, Presquisle, Le Bœuf, and Venango, to retake the place; but there was no food for a larger garrison, and the risk must be run.

¹ Galt, Life of Benjamin West, I. 64 (ed. 1820).

The rest of the troops, with steps quickened by hunger, began their homeward march early in December. "We would soon make M. de Ligneris shift his quarters at Venango," writes Bouquet just after the fort was taken, "if we only had provisions; but we are scarcely able to maintain ourselves a few days here. After God, the success of this expedition is entirely due to the General, who, by bringing about the treaty with the Indians at Easton, struck the French a stunning blow, wisely delayed our advance to wait the effects of that treaty, secured all our posts and left nothing to chance, and resisted the urgent solicitation to take Braddock's road, which would have been our destruction. In all his measures he has shown the greatest prudence, firmness, and ability."¹ No sooner was his work done, than Forbes fell into a state of entire prostration, so that for a time he could neither write a letter nor dictate one. He managed, however, two days after reaching Fort Duquesne, to send Amherst a brief notice of his success, adding: "I shall leave this place as soon as I am able to stand; but God knows when I shall reach Philadelphia, if I ever do."² On the way back, a hut with a chimney was built for him at each stopping-place, and on the twenty-eighth of December Major Halket writes from "Tomahawk Camp:" "How great was our disappointment, on coming to this ground last night, to find that the chimney was unlaid, no fire made, nor any wood cut that would burn. This distressed the General to the greatest degree, by obliging him after his long journey to sit above two hours without any fire, exposed to a snow-storm, which had very near destroyed him entirely ; but with great difficulty, by the assistance of some cordials, he was brought to.”¹ At length, carried all the way in his litter, he reached Philadelphia, where, after lingering through the winter, he died in March, and was buried with military honors in the chancel of Christ-Church.

¹ Bouquet to Chief Justice Allen, 25 Nov. 1758.

² Forbes to Amherst, 26 Nov. 1758.

If his achievement was not brilliant, its solid value was above price. It opened the Great West to English enterprise, took from France half her savage allies, and relieved the western borders from the scourge of Indian war. From southern New York to North Carolina, the frontier populations had cause to bless the memory of the steadfast and all-enduring soldier.

So ended the campaign of 1758. The centre of the French had held its own triumphantly at Ticonderoga ; but their left had been forced back by the capture of Louisbourg, and their right by that of Fort Duquesne, while their entire right wing had been well nigh cut off by the destruction of Fort Frontenac. The outlook was dark. Their own Indians were turning against them. “They have struck us,” wrote Doreil to the Minister of War ; “they have seized three canoes loaded with furs on Lake Ontario, and murdered the men in them : sad forerunner of what we have to fear! Peace, Monseigneur, give us peace! Pardon me, but I cannot repeat that word too often."

¹ Halket to Bouquet, 28 Dec. 1758.

NOTE.—The Bouquet and Haldimand Papers in the British Museum contain a mass of curious correspondence of the principal persons engaged in the expedition under Forbes; copies of it all are before me. The Public Record Office, America and West Indies, has also furnished much material, including the official letters of Forbes. The Writings of Washington, the Archives and Colonial Records of Pennsylvania, and the magazines and newspapers of the time may be mentioned among the sources of information, along with a variety of miscellaneous contemporary letters. The Journals of Christian Frederic Post are printed in full in the Olden Time and elsewhere.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1758, 1759.

THE BRINK OF RUIN.

JEALOUSY OF VAUDREUIL. — HE ASKS FOR MONTCALM'S RECALL. — HIS DISCOMFITURE. — SCENE AT THE GOVERNOR'S HOUSE. — DISGUST OF MONTCALM. — THE CANADIANS DESPONDENT. — DEVICES TO ENCOURAGE THEM. — GASCONADE OF THE GOVERNOR. — DEPLORABLE STATE OF THE COLONY. — MISSION OF BOUGAINVILLE. — DUPLICITY OF VAUDREUIL. — BOUGAINVILLE AT VERSAILLES. — SUBSTANTIAL AID REFUSED TO CANADA. — A MATRIMONIAL TREATY. — RETURN OF BOUGAINVILLE. — MONTCALM ABANDONED BY THE COURT. — HIS PLANS OF DEFENCE. — SAD NEWS FROM CANDIAC. — BOASTS OF VAUDREUIL.

“NEVER was general in a more critical position than I was: God has delivered me; his be the praise! He gives me health, though I am worn out with labor, fatigue, and miserable dissensions that have determined me to ask for my recall. Heaven grant that I may get it!”

Thus wrote Montcalm to his mother after his triumph at Ticonderoga. That great exploit had entailed a train of vexations, for it stirred the envy of Vaudreuil, more especially as it was due to the troops of the line, with no help from Indians, and very little from Canadians. The Governor assured the Colonial Minister that the victory would have bad results, though he gives no hint what these might be; that Montcalm had mismanaged the whole affair; that he would have been beaten but for the manifest interposition of Heaven;¹ and, finally, that he had failed to follow his (Vaudreuil's) directions, and had therefore enabled the English to escape. The real directions of the Governor, dictated, perhaps, by dread lest his rival should reap laurels, were to avoid a general engagement; and it was only by setting them at nought that Abercromby had been routed. After the battle a sharp correspondence passed between the two chiefs. The Governor, who had left Montcalm to his own resources before the crisis, sent him Canadians and Indians in abundance after it was over; and while he cautiously refrained from committing himself by positive orders, repeated again and again that if these reinforcements were used to harass Abercromby's communications, the whole English army would fall back to the Hudson, and leave baggage and artillery a prey to the French. These preposterous assertions and tardy succors were thought by Montcalm to be a device for giving color to the charge that he had not only failed to deserve victory, but had failed also to make use of it.² He did what was possible, and sent strong detachments to act in the English rear; which, though they did not, and could not, compel the enemy to fall back, caused no slight annoyance, till Rogers checked them by the defeat of Marin. Nevertheless Vaudreuil pretended on one hand that Montcalm had done nothing with the Canadians and Indians sent him, and on the other that these same Canadians and Indians had triumphed over the enemy by their mere presence at Ticonderoga. "It was my activity in sending these succors to Carillon [Ticonderoga] that forced the English to retreat. The Marquis de Montcalm might have made their retreat difficult; but it was in vain that I wrote to him, in vain that the colony troops, Canadians and Indians, begged him to pursue the enemy."¹ The succors he speaks of were sent in July and August, while the English did not fall back till the first of November. Neither army left its position till the season was over, and Abercromby did so only when he learned that the French were setting the example. Vaudreuil grew more and more bitter. "As the King has intrusted this colony to me, I cannot help warning you of the unhappy consequences that would follow if the Marquis de Montcalm should remain here. I shall keep him by me till I receive your orders. It is essential that they reach me early." "I pass over in silence all the infamous conduct and indecent talk he has held or countenanced; but I should be wanting in my duty to the King if I did not beg you to ask for his recall."²

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 8 Août, 1758.

² Much of the voluminous correspondence on these matters will be found in N. Y. Col. Docs., X.

He does not say what is meant by infamous conduct and indecent talk; but the allusion is probably to irreverent utterances touching the Governor in which the officers from France were apt to indulge, not always without the knowledge of their chief. Vaudreuil complained of this to Montcalm, adding, "I am greatly above it, and I despise it."¹ To which the General replied: "You are right to despise gossip, supposing that there has been any. For my part, though I hear that I have been torn to pieces without mercy in your presence, I do not believe it."² In these infelicities Bigot figures as peacemaker, though with no perceptible success. Vaudreuil's cup of bitterness was full when letters came from Versailles ordering him to defer to Montcalm on all questions of war, or of civil administration bearing upon war.³ He had begged hard for his rival's recall, and in reply his rival was set over his head.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 8 Avril, 1759.

² Ibid.

The two yokefellows were excellently fitted to exasperate each other: Montcalm, with his southern vivacity of emotion and an impetuous, impatient volubility that sometimes forgot prudence; and Vaudreuil, always affable towards adherents, but full of suspicious egotism and restless jealousy that bristled within him at the very thought of his colleague. Some of the byplay of the quarrel may be seen in Montcalm's familiar correspondence with Bourlamaque. One day the Governor, in his own house, brought up the old complaint that Montcalm, after taking Fort William Henry, did not take Fort Edward also. The General, for the twentieth time, gave good reasons for not making the attempt. "I ended," he tells Bourlamaque, "by saying quietly that when I went to war I did the best I could; and that when one is not pleased with one's lieutenants, one had better take the field in person. He was very much moved, and muttered between his teeth that perhaps he would; at which I said that I should be delighted to serve under him. Madame de Vaudreuil wanted to put in her word. I said: 'Madame, saving due respect, permit me to have the honor to say that ladies ought not to talk war.' She kept on. I said: 'Madame, saving due respect, permit me to have the honor to say that if Madame de Montcalm were here, and heard me talking war with Monsieur le Marquis de Vaudreuil, she would remain silent.' This scene was in presence of eight officers, three of them belonging to the colony troops; and a pretty story they will make of it."

¹ Vaudreuil à Montcalm, 1 Août, 1758.

² Montcalm à Vaudreuil, 6 Août, 1758.

³ Ordres du Roy et Dépêches des Ministres, 1758, 1759.

These letters to Bourlamaque, in their detestable handwriting, small, cramped, confused, without stops, and sometimes almost indecipherable, betray the writer's state of mind. "I should like as well as anybody to be Marshal of France; but to buy the honor with the life I am leading here would be too much." He recounts the last news from Fort Duquesne, just before its fall. "Mutiny among the Canadians, who want to come home; the officers busy with making money, and stealing like mandarins. Their commander sets the example, and will come back with three or four hundred thousand francs; the pettiest ensign, who does not gamble, will have ten, twelve, or fifteen thousand. The Indians don't like Ligneris, who is drunk every day. Forgive the confusion of this letter; I have not slept all night with thinking of the robberies and mismanagement and folly. Pauvre Roi, pauvre France, cara patria!" "Oh, when shall we get out of this country! I think I would give half that I have to go home. Pardon this digression to a melancholy man. It is not that I have not still some remnants of gayety; but what would seem such in anybody else is melancholy for a Languedocian. Burn my letter, and never doubt my attachment." "I shall always say, Happy he who is free from the proud yoke to which I am bound. When shall I see my château of Candiac, my plantations, my chestnut grove, my oil-mill, my mulberry-trees? O bon Dieu! Bon soir; brûlez ma lettre."¹

Never was dispute more untimely than that between these ill-matched colleagues. The position of the colony was desperate. Thus far the Canadians had never lost heart, but had obeyed with admirable alacrity the Governor's call to arms, borne with patience the burdens and privations of the war, and submitted without revolt to the exactions and oppressions of Cadet and his crew; loyal to their native soil, loyal to their Church, loyal to the wretched government that crushed and belittled them. When the able-bodied were ordered to the war, where four fifths of them were employed in the hard and tedious work of transportation, the women, boys, and old men tilled the fields and raised a scanty harvest, which always might be, and sometimes was, taken from them in the name of the King. Yet the least destitute among them were forced every winter to lodge soldiers in their houses, for each of whom they were paid fifteen francs a month, in return for substance devoured and wives and daughters debauched.¹

¹ The above extracts are from letters of 5 and 27 Nov. and 9 Dec. 1758, and 18 and 23 March, 1759.

No pains had been spared to keep up the courage of the people and feed them with flattering illusions. When the partisan officer Boishébert was tried for peculation, his counsel met the charge by extolling the manner in which he had fulfilled the arduous duty of encouraging the Acadians, "putting on an air of triumph even in defeat; using threats, caresses, stratagems; painting our victories in vivid colors; hiding the strength and successes of the enemy; promising succors that did not and could not come; inventing plausible reasons why they did not come, and making new promises to set off the failure of the old; persuading a starved people to forget their misery; taking from some to give to others; and doing all this continually in the face of a superior enemy, that this country might be snatched from England and saved to France."² What Boishébert was doing in Acadia, Vaudreuil was doing on a larger scale in Canada. By indefatigable lying, by exaggerating every success and covering over every reverse, he deceived the people and in some measure himself. He had in abundance the Canadian gift of gasconade, and boasted to the Colonial Minister that one of his countrymen was a match for from three to ten Englishmen. It is possible that he almost believed it; for the midnight surprise of defenceless families and the spreading of panics among scattered border settlements were inseparable from his idea of war. Hence the high value he set on Indians, who in such work outdid the Canadians themselves. Sustained by the intoxication of flattering falsehoods, and not doubting that the blunders and weakness of the first years of the war gave the measure of English efficiency, the colonists had never suspected that they could be subdued.

¹ Mémoire sur le moyen d'entretenir 10,000 Hommes de Troupes dans les Colonies, 1759.

² Procès de Bigot, Cadet, et autres, Mémoire pour le Sieur de Boishébert.

But now there was a change. The reverses of the last campaign, hunger, weariness, and possibly some incipient sense of atrocious misgovernment, began to produce their effect; and some, especially in the towns, were heard to murmur that further resistance was useless. The Canadians, though brave and patient, needed, like Frenchmen, the stimulus of success. "The people are alarmed," said the modest Governor, "and would lose courage if my firmness did not rekindle their zeal to serve the King." ¹

"Rapacity, folly, intrigue, falsehood, will soon ruin this colony which has cost the King so dear," wrote Doreil to the Minister of War. "We must not flatter ourselves with vain hope; Canada is lost if we do not have peace this winter." "It has been saved by miracle in these past three years; nothing but peace can save it now, in spite of all the efforts and the talents of M. de Montcalm."¹ Vaudreuil himself became thoroughly alarmed, and told the Court in the autumn of 1758 that food, arms, munitions, and everything else were fast failing, and that without immediate peace or heavy reinforcements all was lost.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 10 Avril, 1759.

The condition of Canada was indeed deplorable. The St. Lawrence was watched by British ships; the harvest was meagre; a barrel of flour cost two hundred francs; most of the cattle and many of the horses had been killed for food. The people lived chiefly on a pittance of salt cod or on rations furnished by the King; all prices were inordinate; the officers from France were starving on their pay; while a legion of indigenous and imported scoundrels fattened on the general distress. "What a country!" exclaims Montcalm. "Here all the knaves grow rich, and the honest men are ruined." Yet he was resolved to stand by it to the last, and wrote to the Minister of War that he would bury himself under its ruins. "I asked for my recall after the glorious affair of the eighth of July; but since the state of the colony is so bad, I must do what I can to help it and retard its fall." The only hope was in a strong appeal to the Court; and he thought himself fortunate in persuading Vaudreuil to consent that Bougainville should be commissioned to make it, seconded by Doreil. They were to sail in different ships, in order that at least one of them might arrive safe.

¹ Doreil au Ministre, 31 Juillet, 1758. Ibid. 12 Août, 1758. Ibid. 31 Août, 1758. Ibid. 1 Sept. 1758.

Vaudreuil gave Bougainville a letter introducing him to the Colonial Minister in high terms of praise: "He is in all respects better fitted than anybody else to inform you of the state of the colony. I have given him my instructions, and you can trust entirely in what he tells you."¹ Concerning Doreil he wrote to the Minister of War: "I have full confidence in him, and he may be entirely trusted. Everybody here likes him."² While thus extolling the friends of his rival, the Governor took care to provide against the effects of his politic commendations, and wrote thus to his patron, the Colonial Minister: "In order to condescend to the wishes of M. de Montcalm, and leave no means untried to keep in harmony with him, I have given letters to MM. Doreil and Bougainville; but I have the honor to inform you, Monseigneur, that they do not understand the colony, and to warn you that they are creatures of M. de Montcalm."³

The two envoys had sailed for France. Winter was close at hand, and the harbor of Quebec was nearly empty. One ship still lingered, the last of the season, and by her Montcalm sent a letter to his mother: "You will be glad to have me write to you up to the last moment to tell you for the hundredth time that, occupied as I am with the fate of New France, the preservation of the troops, the interest of the state, and my own glory, I think continually of you all. We did our best in 1756, 1757, and 1758; and so, God helping, we will do in 1759, unless you make peace in Europe." Then, shut from the outer world for half a year by barriers of ice, he waited what returning spring might bring forth.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre de la Marine, 4 Nov. 1758.

² Vaudreuil au Ministre de la Guerre, 11 Oct. 1758.

³ Vaudreuil au Ministre de la Marine, 3 Nov. 1758.

Both Bougainville and Doreil escaped the British cruisers and safely reached Versailles, where, in the slippery precincts of the Court, as new to him as they were treacherous, the young aide-de-camp justified all the confidence of his chief. He had interviews with the ministers, the King, and, more important than all, with Madame de Pompadour, whom he succeeded in propitiating, though not, it seems, without difficulty and delay. France, unfortunate by land and sea, with finances ruined and navy crippled, had gained one brilliant victory, and she owed it to Montcalm. She could pay for it in honors, if in nothing else. Montcalm was made lieutenant-general, Lévis major-general, Boursamaque brigadier, and Bougainville colonel and chevalier of St. Louis; while Vaudreuil was solaced with the grand cross of that order.¹ But when the two envoys asked substantial aid for the imperilled colony, the response was chilling. The

¹ Ordres du Roy et Dépêches des Ministres, Janvier, Février, 1759.

Colonial Minister, Berryer, prepossessed against Bougainville by the secret warning of Vaudreuil, received him coldly, and replied to his appeal for help: "Eh, Monsieur, when the house is on fire one cannot occupy one's self with the stable." "At least, Monsieur, nobody will say that you talk like a horse," was the irreverent answer.

Bougainville laid four memorials before the Court, in which he showed the desperate state of the colony and its dire need of help. Thus far, he said, Canada has been saved by the dissensions of the English colonies; but now, for the first time, they are united against her, and prepared to put forth their strength. And he begged for troops, arms, munitions, food, and a squadron to defend the mouth of the St. Lawrence.¹ The reply, couched in a letter to Montcalm, was to the effect that it was necessary to concentrate all the strength of the kingdom for a decisive operation in Europe; that, therefore, the aid required could not be sent; and that the King trusted everything to his zeal and generalship, joined with the valor of the victors of Ticonderoga.² All that could be obtained was between three and four hundred recruits for the regulars, sixty engineers, sappers, and artillerymen, and gunpowder, arms, and provisions sufficient, along with the supplies brought over by the contractor, Cadet, to carry the colony through the next campaign.³

¹ Mémoire remis au Ministre par M. de Bougainville, Décembre, 1758.

² Le Ministre à Montcalm, 3 Fév. 1759.

³ Ordres du Roy et Dépêches des Ministres, Février, 1759.

Montcalm had intrusted Bougainville with another mission, widely different. This was no less than the negotiating of suitable marriages for the eldest son and daughter of his commander, with whom, in the confidence of friendship, he had had many conversations on the matter. "He and I," Montcalm wrote to his mother, Madame de Saint-Véran, "have two ideas touching these marriages, — the first, romantic and chimerical; the second, good, practicable."¹ Bougainville, invoking the aid of a lady of rank, a friend of the family, acquitted himself well of his delicate task. Before he embarked for Canada, in early spring, a treaty was on foot for the marriage of the young Comte de Montcalm to an heiress of sixteen; while Mademoiselle de Montcalm had already become Madame d'Espineuse. "Her father will be delighted," says the successful negotiator.²

Again he crossed the Atlantic and sailed up the St. Lawrence as the portentous spring of 1759 was lowering over the dissolving snows of Canada. With him came a squadron bearing the supplies and the petty reinforcement which the Court had vouchsafed. "A little is precious to those who have nothing," said Montcalm on receiving them. Despatches from the ministers gave warning of a great armament fitted out in English ports for the attack of Quebec, while a letter to the General from the Maréchal de Belleisle, minister of war, told what was expected of him, and why he and the colony were abandoned to their fate. "If we sent a large reinforcement of troops," said Belleisle, "there would be great fear that the English would intercept them on the way; and as the King could never send you forces equal to those which the English are prepared to oppose to you, the attempt would have no other effect than to excite the Cabinet of London to increased efforts for preserving its superiority on the American continent.

¹ Montcalm à Madame de Saint-Véran, 24 Sept. 1758.

² Lettres de Bougainville à Madame de Saint-Véran, 1758, 1759.

"As we must expect the English to turn all their force against Canada, and attack you on several sides at once, it is necessary that you limit your plans of defence to the most essential points and those most closely connected, so that, being concentrated within a smaller space, each part may be within reach of support and succor from the rest. How small soever may be the space you are able to hold, it is indispensable to keep a footing in North America; for if we once lose the country entirely, its recovery will be almost impossible. The King counts on your zeal, courage, and persistency to accomplish this object, and relies on you to spare no pains and no exertions. Impart this resolution to your chief officers, and join with them to inspire your soldiers with it. I have answered for you to the King; I am confident that you will not disappoint me, and that for the glory of the nation, the good of the state, and your own preservation, you will go to the utmost extremity rather than submit to conditions as shameful as those imposed at Louisbourg, the memory of which you will wipe out.”¹ “We will save this unhappy colony, or perish,” was the answer of Montcalm.

It was believed that Canada would be attacked with at least fifty thousand men. Vaudreuil had caused a census to be made of the governments of Montreal, Three Rivers, and Quebec. It showed a little more than thirteen thousand effective men.² To these were to be added thirty-five hundred troops of the line, including the late reinforcement, fifteen hundred colony troops, a body of irregulars in Acadia, and the militia and coureurs-de-bois of Detroit and the other upper posts, along with from one to two thousand Indians who could still be counted on. Great as was the disparity of numbers, there was good hope that the centre of the colony could be defended; for the only avenues by which an enemy could approach were barred by the rock of Quebec, the rapids of the St. Lawrence, and the strong position of Isle-aux-Noix, at the outlet of Lake Champlain. Montcalm had long inclined to the plan of concentration enjoined on him by the Minister of War. Vaudreuil was of another mind; he insisted on still occupying Acadia and the forts of the upper country: matters on which he and the General exchanged a correspondence that widened the breach between them.

Should every effort of resistance fail, and the invaders force their way into the heart of Canada,

¹ Belleisle à Montcalm, 19 Fév. 1759.

² Vaudreuil au Ministre, 8 Avril, 1759. The Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760, says 15,229 effective men.

Montcalm proposed the desperate resort of abandoning the valley of the St. Lawrence, descending the Mississippi with his troops and as many as possible of the inhabitants, and making a last stand for France among the swamps of Louisiana.¹

In April, before Bougainville's return, he wrote to his wife: "Can we hope for another miracle to save us? I trust in God; he fought for us on the eighth of July. Come what may, his will be done! I wait the news from France with impatience and dread. We have had none for eight months; and who knows if much can reach us at all this year? How dearly I have to pay for the dismal privilege of figuring two or three times in the gazettes!" A month later, after Bougainville had come: "Our daughter is well married. I think I would renounce every honor to join you again; but the King must be obeyed. The moment when I see you once more will be the brightest of my life. Adieu, my heart! I believe that I love you more than ever."

Bougainville had brought sad news. He had heard before sailing from France that one of Montcalm's daughters was dead, but could not learn which of them. "I think," says the father, "that it must be poor Mirète, who was like me, and whom I loved very much." He was never to know if this conjecture was true.

To Vaudreuil came a repetition of the detested order that he should defer to Montcalm on all questions of war; and moreover that he should not take command in person except when the whole body of the militia was called out; nor, even then, without consulting his rival.¹ His ire and vexation produced an access of jealous self-assertion, and drove him into something like revolt against the ministerial command. "If the English attack Quebec, I shall always hold myself free to go thither myself with most of the troops and all the militia and Indians I can assemble. On arriving I shall give battle to the enemy; and I shall do so again and again, till I have forced him to retire, or till he has entirely crushed me by excessive superiority of numbers. My obstinacy in opposing his landing will be the more à propos, as I have not the means of sustaining a siege. If I succeed as I wish, I shall next march to Carillon to arrest him there. You see, Monseigneur, that the slightest change in my arrangements would have the most unfortunate consequences."²

¹ Mémoire sur le Canada remis au Ministre, 27 Déc. 1758.

Whether he made good this valorous declaration will presently be seen.

NOTE. — The Archives de la Guerre and the Archives de la Marine contain a mass of letters and documents on the subjects treated in the above chapter; these I have carefully read and collated. The other principal authorities are the correspondence of Montcalm with Bourlamaque and with his own family; the letters of Vaudreuil preserved in the Archives Nationales; and the letters of Bougainville and Doreil to Montcalm and Madame de Saint-Véran while on their mission to France. For copies of these last I am indebted to the present Marquis de Montcalm.

¹ Ordres du Roy et Dépêches des Ministres, Lettre à Vaudreuil, 3 Fév. 1759.

² Vaudreuil au Ministre, 8 Avril, 1759.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1758, 1759.

WOLFE.

THE EXILES OF FORT CUMBERLAND. — RELIEF. — THE VOYAGE TO LOUISBOURG. — THE BRITISH FLEET. — EXPEDITION AGAINST QUEBEC. — EARLY LIFE OF WOLFE. — HIS CHARACTER. — HIS LETTERS TO HIS PARENTS. — HIS DOMESTIC QUALITIES. — APPOINTED TO COMMAND THE EXPEDITION. — SAILS FOR AMERICA.

CAPTAIN JOHN KNOX, of the forty-third regiment, had spent the winter in garrison at Fort Cumberland, on the hill of Beauséjour. For nearly two years he and his comrades had been exiles amid the wilds of Nova Scotia, and the monotonous inaction was becoming insupportable. The great marsh of Tantemar on the one side, and that of Missaguash on the other, two vast flat tracts of glaring snow, bounded by dark hills of spruce and fir, were hateful to their sight. Shooting, fishing, or skating were a dangerous relief; for the neighborhood was infested by “vermin,” as they called the Acadians and their Micmac allies. In January four soldiers and a ranger were waylaid not far from the fort, disabled by bullets, and then scalped alive. They were found the next morning on the snow, contorted in the agonies of death, and frozen like marble statues.

St. Patrick's Day brought more cheerful excitements. The Irish officers of the garrison gave their comrades a feast, having laid in during the autumn a stock of frozen provisions, that the festival of their saint might be duly honored. All was hilarity at Fort Cumberland, where it is recorded that punch to the value of twelve pounds sterling, with a corresponding supply of wine and beer, was consumed on this joyous occasion.¹

About the middle of April a schooner came up the bay, bringing letters that filled men and officers with delight. The regiment was ordered to hold itself ready to embark for Louisbourg and join an expedition to the St. Lawrence, under command of Major-General Wolfe. All that afternoon the soldiers were shouting and cheering in their barracks; and when they mustered for the evening roll-call, there was another burst of huzzas. They waited in expectancy nearly three weeks, and then the transports which were to carry them arrived, bringing the provincials who had been hastily raised in New England to take their place. These Knox describes as a mean-looking set of fellows, of all ages and sizes, and without any kind of discipline; adding that their officers are sober, modest men, who, though of confined ideas, talk very clearly and sensibly, and make a decent appearance in blue, faced with scarlet, though the privates have no uniform at all.

At last the forty-third set sail, the cannon of the fort saluting them, and the soldiers cheering lustily, overjoyed to escape from their long imprisonment. A gale soon began; the transports became separated; Knox's vessel sheltered herself for a time in Passamaquoddy Bay; then passed the Grand Menan, and steered southward and eastward along the coast of Nova Scotia. A calm followed the gale; and they moved so slowly that Knox beguiled the time by fishing over the stern, and caught a halibut so large that he was forced to call for help to pull it in. Then they steered northeastward, now lost in fogs, and now tossed mercilessly on those boisterous waves; till, on the twenty-fourth of May, they saw a rocky and surf-lashed shore, with a forest of masts rising to all appearance out of it. It was the British fleet in the land-locked harbor of Louisbourg.

¹ KNOX, Historical Journal, I. 228.

On the left, as they sailed through the narrow passage, lay the town, scarred with shot and shell, the red cross floating over its battered ramparts; and around in a wide semicircle rose the bristling backs of rugged hills, set thick with dismal evergreens. They passed the great ships of the fleet, and anchored among the other transports towards the head of the harbor. It was not yet free from ice; and the floating masses lay so thick in some parts that the reckless sailors, returning from leave on shore, jumped from one to another to regain their ships. There was a review of troops, and Knox went to see it; but it was over before he reached the place, where he was presently told of a characteristic reply just made by Wolfe to some officers who had apologized for not having taught their men the new exercise. "Poh, poh! —new exercise —new fiddlestick. If they are otherwise well disciplined, and will fight, that's all I shall require of them."

Knox does not record his impressions of his new commander, which must have been disappointing. He called him afterwards a British Achilles; but in person at least Wolfe bore no likeness to the son of Peleus, for never was the soul of a hero cased in a frame so incongruous. His face, when seen in profile, was singular as that of the Great Condé. The forehead and chin receded; the nose, slightly upturned, formed with the other features the point of an obtuse triangle; the mouth was by no means shaped to express resolution; and nothing but the clear, bright, and piercing eye bespoke the spirit within. On his head he wore a black three-cornered hat; his red hair was tied in a queue behind; his narrow shoulders, slender body, and long, thin limbs were cased in a scarlet frock, with broad cuffs and ample skirts that reached the knee; while on his left arm he wore a band of crape in mourning for his father, of whose death he had heard a few days before.

James Wolfe was in his thirty-third year. His father was an officer of distinction, Major-General Edward Wolfe, and he himself, a delicate and sensitive child, but an impetuous and somewhat headstrong youth, had served the King since the age of fifteen. From childhood he had dreamed of the army and the wars. At sixteen he was in Flanders, adjutant of his regiment, discharging the duties of the post in a way that gained him early promotion and, along with a painstaking assiduity, showing a precocious faculty for commanding men. He passed with credit through several campaigns, took part in the victory of Dettingen, and then went to Scotland to fight at Culloden. Next we find him at Stirling, Perth, and Glasgow, always ardent and always diligent, constant in military duty, and giving his spare hours to mathematics and Latin. He presently fell in love; and being disappointed, plunged into a variety of dissipations, contrary to his usual habits, which were far above the standard of that profligate time.

WOLFE.

AGED 32.

At twenty-three he was a lieutenant-colonel, commanding his regiment in the then dirty and barbarous town of Inverness, amid a disaffected and turbulent population whom it was his duty to keep in order: a difficult task, which he accomplished so well as to gain the special commendation of the King, and even the goodwill of the Highlanders themselves. He was five years among these northern hills, battling with ill-health, and restless under the intellectual barrenness of his surroundings. He felt his position to be in no way salutary, and wrote to his mother: "The fear of becoming a mere ruffian and of imbibing the tyrannical principles of an absolute commander, or giving way insensibly to the temptations of power till I became proud, insolent, and intolerable, — these considerations will make me wish to leave the regiment before next winter; that by frequenting men above myself I may know my true condition, and by discoursing with the other sex may learn some civility and mildness of carriage." He got leave of absence, and spent six months in Paris, where he was presented at Court and saw much of the best society. This did not prevent him from working hard to perfect himself in French, as well as in horsemanship, fencing, dancing, and other accomplishments, and from earnestly seeking an opportunity to study the various armies of Europe. In this he was thwarted by the stupidity and prejudice of the commander-in-chief; and he made what amends he could by extensive reading in all that bore on military matters.

His martial instincts were balanced by strong domestic inclinations. He was fond of children; and after his disappointment in love used to say that they were the only true inducement to marriage. He was a most dutiful son, and wrote continually to both his parents. Sometimes he would philosophize on the good and ill of life; sometimes he held questionings with his conscience; and once he wrote to his mother in a strain of self-accusation not to be expected from a bold and determined soldier. His nature was a compound of tenderness and fire, which last sometimes showed itself in sharp and unpleasant flashes. His excitable temper was capable almost of fierceness, and he could now and then be needlessly stern; but towards his father, mother, and friends he was a model of steady affection. He made friends readily, and kept them, and was usually a pleasant companion, though subject to sallies of imperious irritability which occasionally broke through his strong sense of good breeding. For this his susceptible constitution was largely answerable, for he was a living barometer, and his spirits rose and fell with every change of weather. In spite of his impatient outbursts, the officers whom he had commanded remained attached to him for life; and, in spite of his rigorous discipline, he was beloved by his soldiers, to whose comfort he was always attentive. Frankness, directness, essential good feeling, and a high integrity atoned for all his faults.

In his own view, as expressed to his mother, he was a person of very moderate abilities, aided by more than usual diligence; but this modest judgment of himself by no means deprived him of self-confidence, nor, in time of need, of self-assertion. He delighted in every kind of hardihood; and, in his contempt for effeminacy, once said to his mother: "Better be a savage of some use than a gentle, amorous puppy, obnoxious to all the world." He was far from despising fame; but the controlling principles of his life were duty to his country and his profession, loyalty to the King, and fidelity to his own ideal of the perfect soldier. To the parent who was the confidant of his most intimate thoughts he said: "All that I wish for myself is that I may at all times be ready and firm to meet that fate we cannot shun, and to die gracefully and properly when the hour comes." Never was wish more signally fulfilled. Again he tells her: "My utmost desire and ambition is to look steadily upon danger;" and his desire was accomplished. His intrepidity was complete. No form of death had power to daunt him. Once and again, when bound on some deadly enterprise of war, he calmly counts the chances whether or not he can compel his feeble body to bear him on till the work is done. A frame so delicately strung could not have been insensible to danger; but forgetfulness of self, and the absorption of every faculty in the object before him, shut out the sense of fear. He seems always to have been at his best in the thick of battle; most complete in his mastery over himself and over others.

But it is in the intimacies of domestic life that one sees him most closely, and especially in his letters to his mother, from whom he inherited his frail constitution, without the beauty that distinguished her. "The greatest happiness that I wish for here is to see you happy." "If you stay much at home I will come and shut myself up with you for three weeks or a month, and play at piquet from morning till night; and you shall laugh at my short red hair as much as you please." The playing at piquet was a sacrifice to filial attachment; for the mother loved cards, and the son did not. "Don't trouble yourself about my room or my bedclothes; too much care and delicacy at this time would enervate me and complete the destruction of a tottering constitution. Such as it is, it must serve me now, and I'll make the best of it while it holds." At the beginning of the war his father tried to dissuade him from offering his services on board the fleet; and he replies in a letter to Mrs. Wolfe: "It is no time to think of what is convenient or agreeable; that service is certainly the best in which we are the most useful. For my part, I am determined never to give myself a moment's concern about the nature of the duty which His Majesty is pleased to order us upon. It will be a sufficient comfort to you two, as far as my person is concerned, — at least it will be a reasonable consolation, — to reflect that the Power which has hitherto preserved me may, if it be his pleasure, continue to do so; if not, that it is but a few days or a few years more or less, and that those who perish in their duty and in the service of their country die honorably." Then he proceeds to give particular directions about his numerous dogs, for the welfare of which in his absence he provides with anxious solicitude, especially for "my friend Cæsar, who has great merit and much good-humor."

After the unfortunate expedition against Rochefort, when the board of general officers appointed to inquire into the affair were passing the highest encomiums upon his conduct, his parents were at Bath, and he took possession of their house at Blackheath, whence he wrote to his mother: "I lie in your chamber, dress in the General's little parlor, and dine where you did. The most perceptible difference and change of affairs (exclusive of the bad table I keep) is the number of dogs in the yard; but by coaxing Ball [his father's dog] and rubbing his back with my stick, I have reconciled him with the new ones, and put them in some measure under his protection."

When about to sail on the expedition against Louisbourg, he was anxious for his parents, and wrote to his uncle, Major Wolfe, at Dublin: "I trust you will give the best advice to my mother, and such assistance, if it should be wanted, as the distance between you will permit. I mention this because the General seems to decline apace, and narrowly escaped being carried off in the spring. She, poor woman, is in a bad state of health, and needs the care of some friendly hand. She has long and painful fits of illness, which by succession and inheritance are likely to devolve on me, since I feel the early symptoms of them." Of his friends Guy Carleton, afterwards Lord Dorchester, and George Warde, the companion of his boyhood, he also asks help for his mother in his absence.

His part in the taking of Louisbourg greatly increased his reputation. After his return he went to Bath to recruit his health; and it seems to have been here that he wooed and won Miss Katherine Lowther, daughter of an ex-Governor of Barbadoes, and sister of the future Lord Lonsdale. A betrothal took place, and Wolfe wore her portrait till the night before his death. It was a little before this engagement that he wrote to his friend Lieutenant-Colonel Rickson: "I have this day signified to Mr. Pitt that he may dispose of my slight carcass as he pleases, and that I am ready for any undertaking within the compass of my skill and cunning. I am in a very bad condition both with the gravel and rheumatism ; but I had much rather die than decline any kind of service that offers. If I followed my own taste it would lead me into Germany. However, it is not our part to choose, but to obey. My opinion is that I shall join the army in America."

Pitt chose him to command the expedition then fitting out against Quebec ; made him a major-general, though, to avoid giving offence to older officers, he was to hold that rank in America alone ; and permitted him to choose his own staff. Appointments made for merit, and not through routine and patronage, shocked the Duke of Newcastle, to whom a man like Wolfe was a hopeless enigma ; and he told George II. that Pitt's new general was mad. "Mad is he?" returned the old King ; "then I hope he will bite some others of my generals."

At the end of January the fleet was almost ready, and Wolfe wrote to his uncle Walter : "I am to act a greater part in this business than I wished. The backwardness of some of the older officers has in some measure forced the Government to come down so low. I shall do my best, and leave the rest to fortune, as perforce we must when there are not the most commanding abilities. We expect to sail in about three weeks. A London life and little exercise disagrees entirely with me, but the sea still more. If I have health and constitution enough for the campaign, I shall think myself a lucky man ; what happens afterwards is of no great consequence." He sent to his mother an affectionate letter of farewell, went to Spithead, embarked with Admiral Saunders in the ship "Neptune," and set sail on the seventeenth of February. In a few hours the whole squadron was at sea, the transports, the frigates, and the great line-of-battle ships, with their ponderous armament and their freight of rude humanity armed and trained for destruction; while on the heaving deck of the "Neptune," wretched with seasickness and racked with pain, stood the gallant invalid who was master of it all.

The fleet consisted of twenty-two ships of the line, with frigates, sloops-of-war, and a great number of transports. When Admiral Saunders arrived with his squadron off Louisbourg, he found the entrance blocked by ice, and was forced to seek harborage at Halifax. The squadron of Admiral Holmes, which had sailed a few days earlier, proceeded to New York to take on board troops destined for the expedition, while the squadron of Admiral Durell steered for the St. Lawrence to intercept the expected ships from France.

In May the whole fleet, except the ten ships with Durell, was united in the harbor of Louisbourg. Twelve thousand troops were to have been employed for the expedition; but several regiments expected from the West Indies were for some reason countermanded, while the accessions from New York and the Nova Scotia garrisons fell far short of the looked-for numbers. Three weeks before leaving Louisbourg, Wolfe writes to his uncle Walter that he has an army of nine thousand men. The actual number seems to have been somewhat less.¹ "Our troops are good," he informs Pitt; "and if valor can make amends for the want of numbers, we shall probably succeed."

Three brigadiers, all in the early prime of life, held command under him: Monckton, Townshend, and Murray. They were all his superiors in birth, and one of them, Townshend, never forgot that he was so. "George Townshend," says Walpole, "has thrust himself again into the service; and, as far as wrongheadedness will go, is very proper for a hero."² The same caustic writer says further that he was of "a proud, sullen, and contemptuous temper," and that he "saw everything in an ill-natured and ridiculous light."³ Though his perverse and envious disposition made him a difficult colleague, Townshend had both talents and energy; as also had Monckton, the same officer who commanded at the capture of Beau-séjour in 1755. Murray, too, was well matched to the work in hand, in spite of some lingering remains of youthful rashness.

On the sixth of June the last ship of the fleet sailed out of Louisbourg harbor, the troops cheering and the officers drinking to the toast, "British colors on every French fort, port, and garrison in America." The ships that had gone before lay to till the whole fleet was reunited, and then all steered together for the St. Lawrence. From the headland of Cape Egmont, the Micmac hunter, gazing far out over the shimmering sea, saw the horizon flecked with their canvas wings, as they bore northward on their errand of havoc.

¹ See Grenville Correspondence, I. 305.

² Horace Walpole, Letters III. 207 (ed. Cunningham, 1857).

³ Ibid. George II., II. 345.

NOTE. — For the material of the foregoing sketch of Wolfe I am indebted to Wright's excellent Life of him and the numerous letters contained in it. Several autograph letters which have escaped the notice of Mr. Wright are preserved in the Public Record Office. The following is a characteristic passage from one of these, written on board the "Neptune," at sea, on the sixth of June, the day when the fleet sailed from Louisbourg. It is directed to a nobleman of high rank in the army, whose name does not appear, the address being lost (War Office Records: North America, various, 1756-1763): "I have had the honour to receive two letters from your Lordship, one of an old date, concerning my stay in this country [after the capture of Louisbourg], in answer to which I shall only say that the Marshal told me I was to return at the end of the campaign; and as General Amherst had no other commands than to send me to winter at Halifax under the orders of an officer [Brigadier Lawrence] who was but a few months before put over my head, I thought it was much better to get into the way of service and out of the way of being insulted; and as the style of your Lordship's letter is pretty strong, I must take the liberty to inform you that . . . rather than receive orders in the Government [of Nova Scotia] from an officer younger than myself (though a very worthy man), I should certainly have desired leave to resign my commission; for as I neither ask nor expect any favour, so I never intend to submit to any ill-usage whatsoever."

Many other papers in the Public Record Office have been consulted in preparing the above chapter, including the secret instructions of the King to Wolfe and to Saunders, and the letters of Amherst to Wolfe and to Pitt. Other correspondence touching the same subjects is printed in Selections from the Public Documents of Nova Scotia, 441-450. Knox, Mante, and Entick are the best contemporary printed sources.

A story has gained currency respecting the last interview of Wolfe with Pitt, in which he is said to have flourished his sword and boasted of what he would achieve. This anecdote was told by Lord Temple, who was present at the interview, to Mr Grenville, who, many years after, told it to Earl Stanhope, by whom it was made public. That the incident underwent essential changes in the course of these transmissions, — which extended over more than half a century, for Earl Stanhope was not born till 1805, — can never be doubted by one who considers the known character of Wolfe, who may have uttered some vehement expression, but who can never be suspected of gasconade.

CHAPTER XXV.

1759.

WOLFE AT QUEBEC.

FRENCH PREPARATION. — MUSTER OF FORCES. — GASCONADE OF VAUDREUIL. — PLAN OF DEFENCE. — STRENGTH OF MONTCALM. — ADVANCE OF WOLFE. — BRITISH SAILORS. — LANDING OF THE ENGLISH. — DIFFICULTIES BEFORE THEM. — STORM. — FIRESHIPS. — CONFIDENCE OF FRENCH COMMANDERS. — WOLFE OCCUPIES POINT LEVI. — A FUTILE NIGHT ATTACK. — QUEBEC BOMBARDED. — WOLFE AT THE MONTMORENCI. — SKIRMISHES. — DANGER OF THE ENGLISH POSITION. — EFFECTS OF THE BOMBARDMENT. — DESERTION OF CANADIANS. — THE ENGLISH ABOVE QUEBEC. — SEVERITIES OF WOLFE. — ANOTHER ATTEMPT TO BURN THE FLEET. — DESPERATE ENTERPRISE OF WOLFE. — THE HEIGHTS OF MONTMORENCI. — REPULSE OF THE ENGLISH.

IN early spring the chiefs of Canada met at Montreal to settle a plan of defence. What at first they most dreaded was an advance of the enemy by way of Lake Champlain. Bourlamaque, with three battalions, was ordered to take post at Ticonderoga, hold it if he could, or, if overborne by numbers, fall back to Isle-aux-Noix, at the outlet of the lake. La Corne was sent with a strong detachment to intrench himself at the head of the rapids of the St. Lawrence, and oppose any hostile movement from Lake Ontario. Every able-bodied man in the colony, and every boy who could fire a gun, was to be called to the field. Vaudreuil sent a circular letter to the militia captains of all the parishes, with orders to read it to the parishioners. It exhorted them to defend their religion, their wives, their children, and their goods from the fury of the heretics; declared that he, the Governor, would never yield up Canada on any terms whatever; and ordered them to join the army at once, leaving none behind but the old, the sick, the women, and the children.¹ The Bishop issued a pastoral mandate: "On every side, dearest brethren, the enemy is making immense preparations. His forces, at least six times more numerous than ours, are already in motion. Never was Canada in a state so critical and full of peril. Never were we so destitute, or threatened with an attack so fierce, so general, and so obstinate. Now, in truth, we may say, more than ever before, that our only resource is in the powerful succor of our Lord. Then, dearest brethren, make every effort to deserve it. 'Seek first the kingdom of God; and all these things shall be added unto you.'" And he reproves their sins, exhorts them to repentance, and ordains processions, masses, and prayers.²

Vaudreuil bustled and boasted. In May he wrote to the Minister: "The zeal with which I am animated for the service of the King will always make me surmount the greatest obstacles. I am taking the most proper measures to give the enemy a good reception whenever he may attack us. I keep in view the defence of Quebec. I have given orders in the parishes below to muster the inhabitants who are able to bear arms, and place women, children, cattle, and even hay and grain, in places of safety. Permit me, Monseigneur, to beg you to have the goodness to assure His Majesty that, to whatever hard extremity I may be reduced, my zeal will be equally ardent and indefatigable, and that I shall do the impossible to prevent our enemies from making progress in any direction, or, at least, to make them pay extremely dear for it.”¹ Then he writes again to say that Amherst with a great army will, as he learns, attack Ticonderoga; that Bradstreet, with six thousand men, will advance to Lake Ontario; and that six thousand more will march to the Ohio. “Whatever progress they may make,” he adds, “I am resolved to yield them nothing, but hold my ground even to annihilation.” He promises to do his best to keep on good terms with Montcalm, and ends with a warm eulogy of Bigot.²

¹ Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760.

² I am indebted for a copy of this mandate to the kindness of Abbé Bois. As printed by Knox, it is somewhat different, though the spirit is the same.

It was in the midst of all these preparations that Bougainville arrived from France with news that a great fleet was on its way to attack Quebec. The town was filled with consternation mixed with surprise, for the Canadians had believed that the dangerous navigation of the St. Lawrence would deter their enemies from the attempt. “Everybody,” writes one of them, “was stupefied at an enterprise that seemed so bold.” In a few days a crowd of sails was seen approaching. They were not enemies, but friends. It was the fleet of the contractor Cadet, commanded by an officer named Kanon, and loaded with supplies for the colony. They anchored in the harbor, eighteen sail in all, and their arrival spread universal joy. Admiral Durell had come too late to intercept them, catching but three stragglers that had lagged behind the rest. Still others succeeded in eluding him, and before the first of June five more ships had come safely into port.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 8 Mai, 1759.

² Vaudreuil au Ministre, 20 [?] Mai, 1759.

When the news brought by Bougainville reached Montreal, nearly the whole force of the colony, except the detachments of Bourlamaque and La Corne, was ordered to Quebec. Montcalm hastened thither, and Vaudreuil followed. The Governor-General wrote to the Minister in his usual strain, as if all the hope of Canada rested in him. Such, he says, was his activity, that, though very busy, he reached Quebec only a day and a half after Montcalm; and, on arriving, learned from his scouts that English ships-of-war had already appeared at Isle-aux-Coudres. These were the squadron of Durell. "I expect," Vaudreuil goes on, "to be sharply attacked, and that our enemies will make their most powerful efforts to conquer this colony; but there is no ruse, no resource, no means which my zeal does not suggest to lay snares for them, and finally, when the exigency demands it, to fight them with an ardor, and even a fury, which exceeds the range of their ambitious designs. The troops, the Canadians, and the Indians are not ignorant of the resolution I have taken, and from which I shall not recoil under any circumstance whatever. The burghers of this city have already put their goods and furniture in places of safety. The old men, women, and children hold themselves ready to leave town. My firmness is generally applauded. It has penetrated every heart; and each man says aloud: 'Canada, our native land, shall bury us under its ruins before we surrender to the English!' This is decidedly my own determination, and I shall hold to it inviolably." He launches into high praise of the contractor Cadet, whose zeal for the service of the King and the defence of the colony he declares to be triumphant over every difficulty. It is necessary, he adds, that ample supplies of all kinds should be sent out in the autumn, with the distribution of which Cadet offers to charge himself, and to account for them at their first cost; but he does not say what prices his disinterested friend will compel the destitute Canadians to pay for them.¹

Five battalions from France, nearly all the colony troops, and the militia from every part of Canada poured into Quebec, along with a thousand or more Indians, who, at the call of Vaudreuil, came to lend their scalping-knives to the defence. Such was the ardor of the people that boys of fifteen and men of eighty were to be seen in the camp. Isle-aux-Coudres and Isle d'Orléans were ordered to be evacuated, and an excited crowd on the rock of Quebec watched hourly for the approaching fleet. Days passed and weeks passed, yet it did not appear. Meanwhile Vaudreuil held council after council to settle a plan of defence. They were strange scenes: a crowd of officers of every rank, mixed pell-mell in a small room, pushing, shouting, elbowing each other, interrupting each other; till Montcalm, in despair, took each aside after the meeting was over, and made him give his opinion in writing.¹

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 28 Mai, 1759.

He himself had at first proposed to encamp the army on the plains of Abraham and the meadows of the St. Charles, making that river his line of defence;² but he changed his plan, and, with the concurrence of Vaudreuil, resolved to post his whole force on the St. Lawrence below the city, with his right resting on the St. Charles, and his left on the Montmorenci. Here, accordingly, the troops and militia were stationed as they arrived. Early in June, standing at the north-eastern brink of the rock of Quebec, one could have seen the whole position at a glance. On the curving shore from the St. Charles to the rocky gorge of the Montmorenci, a distance of seven or eight miles, the whitewashed dwellings of the parish of Beauport stretched down the road in a double chain, and the fields on both sides were studded with tents, huts, and Indian wigwams. Along the borders of the St. Lawrence, as far as the eye could distinguish them, gangs of men were throwing up redoubts, batteries, and lines of intrenchment. About midway between the two extremities of the encampment ran the little river of Beauport; and on the rising ground just beyond it stood a large stone house, round which the tents were thickly clustered; for here Montcalm had made his headquarters.

¹ Journal du Siège de Québec déposé à la Bibliothèque de Hartwell, en Angleterre. (Printed at Quebec, 1836.)

² Livre d'Ordres, Disposition pour s'opposer à la Descente.

A boom of logs chained together was drawn across the mouth of the St. Charles, which was further guarded by two hulks mounted with cannon. The bridge of boats that crossed the stream nearly a mile above, formed the chief communication between the city and the camp. Its head towards Beauport was protected by a strong and extensive earthwork; and the banks of the stream on the Quebec side were also intrenched, to form a second line of defence in case the position at Beauport should be forced.

In the city itself every gate, except the Palace Gate, which gave access to the bridge, was closed and barricaded. A hundred and six cannon were mounted on the walls.¹ A floating battery of twelve heavy pieces, a number of gunboats, eight fireships, and several firerafts formed the river defences. The largest merchantmen of Kanon's fleet were sacrificed to make the fireships; and the rest, along with the frigates that came with them, were sent for safety up the St. Lawrence beyond the River Richelieu, whence about a thousand of their sailors returned to man the batteries and gunboats.

In the camps along the Beauport shore were about fourteen thousand men, besides Indians. The regulars held the centre ; the militia of Quebec and Three Rivers were on the right, and those of Montreal on the left. In Quebec itself there was a garrison of between one and two thousand men under the Chevalier de Ramesay. Thus the whole number, including Indians, amounted to more than sixteen thousand ;¹ and though the Canadians who formed the greater part of it were of little use in the open field, they could be trusted to fight well behind intrenchments. Against this force, posted behind defensive works, on positions almost impregnable by nature, Wolfe brought less than nine thousand men available for operations on land.² The steep and lofty heights that lined the river made the cannon of the ships for the most part useless, while the exigencies of the naval service forbade employing the sailors on shore. In two or three instances only, throughout the siege, small squads of them landed to aid in moving and working cannon ; and the actual fighting fell to the troops alone.

¹ This number was found after the siege. Knox, II. 151. Some French writers make it much greater.

Vaudreuil and Bigot took up their quarters with the army. The Governor-General had delegated the command of the land-forces to Montcalm, whom, in his own words, he authorized "to give orders everywhere, provisionally." His relations with him were more than ever anomalous and critical ; for while Vaudreuil, in virtue of his office, had a right to supreme command, Montcalm, now a lieutenant-general, held a military grade far above him ; and the Governor, while always writing himself down in his despatches as the head and front of every movement, had too little self-confidence not to leave the actual command in the hands of his rival.

¹ See Appendix H.

² Ibid.

Days and weeks wore on, and the first excitement gave way to restless impatience. Why did not the English come? Many of the Canadians thought that Heaven would interpose and wreck the English fleet, as it had wrecked that of Admiral Walker half a century before. There were processions, prayers, and vows towards this happy consummation. Food was scarce. Bigot and Cadet lived in luxury; fowls by thousands were fattened with wheat for their tables, while the people were put on rations of two ounces of bread a day.¹ Durell and his ships were reported to be still at Isle-aux-Coudres. Vaudreuil sent thither a party of Canadians, and they captured three midshipmen, who, says Montcalm, had gone ashore pour polissonner, that is, on a lark. These youths were brought to Quebec, where they increased the general anxiety by grossly exaggerating the English force.

At length it became known that eight English vessels were anchored in the north channel of Orleans, and on the twenty-first of June the masts of three of them could plainly be seen. One of the fireships was consumed in a vain attempt to burn them, and several firerafts and a sort of infernal machine were tried with no better success; the unwelcome visitors still held their posts.

Meanwhile the whole English fleet had slowly advanced, piloted by Denis de Vitré, a Canadian of good birth, captured at sea some time before, and now compelled to serve, under a threat of being hanged if he refused.¹ Nor was he alone; for when Durell reached the place where the river pilots were usually taken on board, he raised a French flag to his mast-head, causing great rejoicings among the Canadians on shore, who thought that a fleet was come to their rescue, and that their country was saved. The pilots launched their canoes and came out to the ships, where they were all made prisoners; then the French flag was lowered, and the red cross displayed in its stead. The spectators on shore turned from joy to despair; and a priest who stood watching the squadron with a telescope is said to have dropped dead with the revulsion of feeling.

¹ Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760.

Towards the end of June the main fleet was near the mountain of Cape Tourmente. The passage called the Traverse, between the Cape and the lower end of the Island of Orleans, was reputed one of the most dangerous parts of the St. Lawrence; and as the ships successively came up, the captive pilots were put on board to carry them safely through, on pain of death. One of these men was assigned to the transport "Goodwill," in which was Captain Knox, who spoke French, and who reports thus in his Diary: "He gasconaded at a most extravagant rate, and gave us to understand that it was much against his will that he was become an English pilot. The poor fellow assumed great latitude in his conversation, and said 'he made no doubt that some of the fleet would return to England, but they should have a dismal tale to carry with them; for Canada should be the grave of the whole army, and he expected in a short time to see the walls of Quebec ornamented with English scalps.' Had it not been in obedience to the Admiral, who gave orders that he should not be ill-used, he would certainly have been thrown overboard." The master of the transport was an old sailor named Killick, who despised the whole Gallic race, and had no mind to see his ship in charge of a Frenchman. "He would not let the pilot speak," continues Knox, "but fixed his mate at the helm, charged him not to take orders from any person but himself, and going forward with his trumpet to the forecastle, gave the necessary instructions. All that could be said by the commanding officer and the other gentlemen on board was to no purpose; the pilot declared we should be lost, for that no French ship ever presumed to pass there without a pilot. 'Ay, ay, my dear,' replied our son of Neptune, 'but, damn me, I'll convince you that an Englishman shall go where a Frenchman dare not show his nose.' The 'Richmond' frigate being close astern of us, the commanding officer called out to the captain and told him our case; he inquired who the master was, and was answered from the forecastle by the man himself, who told him 'he was old Killick, and that was enough.' I went forward with this experienced mariner, who pointed out the channel to me as we passed; showing me by the ripple and color of the water where there was any danger, and distinguishing the places where there were ledges of rocks (to me invisible) from banks of sand, mud, or gravel. He gave his orders with great unconcern, joked with the sounding-boats which lay off on each side with different colored flags for our guidance; and when any of them called to him and pointed to the deepest water, he answered: 'Ay, ay, my dear, chalk it down, a damned dangerous navigation, eh! If you don't make a sputter about it you'll get no credit in England.' After we had cleared this remarkable place, where the channel forms a complete zigzag, the master called to his mate to give the helm to somebody else, saying, 'Damn me if there are not a thousand places in the Thames fifty times more hazardous than this; I am ashamed that Englishmen should make such a rout about it.' The Frenchman asked me if the captain had not been there before. I assured him in the negative; upon which he viewed him with great attention, lifting at the same time his hands and eyes to heaven with astonishment and fervency."¹

¹ Mémorial de Jean-Denis de Vitré au Très-honorable William Pitt.

Vaudreuil was blamed for not planting cannon at a certain plateau on the side of the mountain of Cape Tourmente, where the gunners would have been inaccessible, and whence they could have battered every passing ship with a plunging fire. As it was, the whole fleet sailed safely through.

¹ Others, as well as the pilot, were astonished. "The enemy passed sixty ships of war where we hardly dared risk a vessel of a hundred tons." "Notwithstanding all our precautions, the English, without any accident, by night, as well as by day, passed through it [the Traverse] their ships of seventy and eighty guns, and even many of them together." Vaudreuil au Ministre, 22 Oct. 1759.

On the twenty-sixth they were all anchored off the south shore of the Island of Orleans, a few miles from Quebec; and, writes Knox, "here we are entertained with a most agreeable prospect of a delightful country on every side; windmills, watermills, churches, chapels, and compact farmhouses, all built with stone, and covered, some with wood, and others with straw. The lands appear to be everywhere well cultivated; and with the help of my glass I can discern that they are sowed with flax, wheat, barley, peas, etc., and the grounds are enclosed with wooden pales. The weather to-day is agreeably warm. A light fog sometimes hangs over the highlands, but in the river we have a fine clear air. In the curve of the river, while we were under sail, we had a transient view of a stupendous natural curiosity called the waterfall of Montmorenci."

That night Lieutenant Meech, with forty New England rangers, landed on the Island of Orleans, and found a body of armed inhabitants, who tried to surround him. He beat them off, and took possession of a neighboring farmhouse, where he remained till daylight; then pursued the enemy, and found that they had crossed to the north shore. The whole army now landed, and were drawn up on the beach. As they were kept there for some time, Knox and several brother officers went to visit the neighboring church of Saint-Laurent, where they found a letter from the parish priest, directed to "The Worthy Officers of the British Army," praying that they would protect the sacred edifice, and also his own adjoining house, and adding, with somewhat needless civility, that he wished they had come sooner, that they might have enjoyed the asparagus and radishes of his garden, now unhappily going to seed. The letter concluded with many compliments and good wishes, in which the Britons to whom they were addressed saw only "the frothy politeness so peculiar to the French." The army marched westward and encamped. Wolfe, with his chief engineer, Major Mackellar, and an escort of light infantry, advanced to the extreme point of the island.

Here he could see, in part, the desperate nature of the task he had undertaken. Before him, three or four miles away, Quebec sat perched upon her rock, a congregation of stone houses, churches, palaces, convents, and hospitals; the green trees of the Seminary garden and the spires of the Cathedral, the Ursulines, the Recollets, and the Jesuits. Beyond rose the loftier height of Cape Diamond, edged with palisades and capped with redoubt and parapet. Batteries frowned everywhere; the Château battery, the Clergy battery, the Hospital battery, on the rock above, and the Royal, Dauphin's, and Queen's batteries on the strand, where the dwellings and warehouses of the lower town clustered beneath the cliff.

Full in sight lay the far-extended camp of Montcalm, stretching from the St. Charles, beneath the city walls, to the chasm and cataract of the Montmorenci. From the cataract to the river of Beauport, its front was covered by earthworks along the brink of abrupt and lofty heights; and from the river of Beauport to the St. Charles, by broad flats of mud swept by the fire of redoubts, intrenchments, a floating battery, and the city itself. Above the city, Cape Diamond hid the view; but could Wolfe have looked beyond it, he would have beheld a prospect still more disheartening. Here, mile after mile, the St. Lawrence was walled by a range of steeps, often inaccessible, and always so difficult that a few men at the top could hold an army in check; while at Cap-Rouge, about eight miles distant, the high plateau was cleft by the channel of a stream which formed a line of defence as strong as that of the Montmorenci. Quebec was a natural fortress. Bougainville had long before examined the position, and reported that "by the help of intrenchments, easily and quickly made, and defended by three or four thousand men, I think the city would be safe. I do not believe that the English will make any attempt against it; but they may have the madness to do so, and it is well to be prepared against surprise."

Not four thousand men, but four times four thousand, now stood in its defence; and their chiefs wisely resolved not to throw away the advantages of their position. Nothing more was heard of Vaudreuil's bold plan of attacking the invaders at their landing; and Montcalm had declared that he would play the part, not of Hannibal, but of Fabius. His plan was to avoid a general battle, run no risks, and protract the defence till the resources of the enemy were exhausted, or till approaching winter forced them to withdraw. Success was almost certain but for one contingency. Amherst, with a force larger than that of Wolfe, was moving against Ticonderoga. If he should capture it, and advance into the colony, Montcalm would be forced to weaken his army by sending strong detachments to oppose him. Here was Wolfe's best hope. This failing, his only chance was in audacity: The game was desperate; but, intrepid gamester as he was in war, he was a man, in the last resort, to stake everything on the cast of the dice.

The elements declared for France. On the afternoon of the day when Wolfe's army landed, a violent squall swept over the St. Lawrence, dashed the ships together, drove several ashore, and destroyed many of the flat-boats from which the troops had just disembarked. "I never saw so much distress among shipping in my whole life," writes an officer to a friend in Boston. Fortunately the storm subsided as quickly as it rose. Vaudreuil saw that the hoped-for deliverance had failed; and as the tempest had not destroyed the British fleet, he resolved to try the virtue of his fireships. "I am afraid," says Montcalm, "that they have cost us a million, and will be good for nothing after all." This remained to be seen. Vaudreuil gave the chief command of them to a naval officer named Delouche; and on the evening of the twenty-eighth, after long consultation and much debate among their respective captains, they set sail together at ten o'clock. The night was moonless and dark. In less than an hour they were at the entrance of the north channel. Delouche had been all enthusiasm; but as he neared the danger his nerves failed, and he set fire to his ship half an hour too soon, the rest following his example.¹

There was an English outpost at the Point of Orleans; and, about eleven o'clock, the sentries descried through the gloom the ghostly outlines of the approaching ships. As they gazed, these mysterious strangers began to dart tongues of flame; fire ran like lightning up their masts and sails, and then they burst out like volcanoes. Filled as they were with pitch, tar, and every manner of combustible, mixed with fireworks, bombs, grenades, and old cannon, swivels, and muskets loaded to the throat, the effect was terrific. The troops at the Point, amazed at the sudden eruption, the din of the explosions, and the showers of grâpeshot that rattled among the trees, lost their wits and fled. The blazing dragons hissed and roared, spouted sheets of fire, vomited smoke in black, pitchy volumes and vast illumined clouds, and shed their infernal glare on the distant city, the tents of Montcalm, and the long red lines of the British army, drawn up in array of battle, lest the French should cross from their encampments to attack them in the confusion. Knox calls the display "the grandest fireworks that can possibly be conceived." Yet the fireships did no other harm than burning alive one of their own captains and six or seven of his sailors who failed to escape in their boats. Some of them ran ashore before reaching the fleet; the others were seized by the intrepid English sailors, who, approaching in their boats, threw grappling-irons upon them and towed them towards land, till they swung round and stranded. Here, after venting their fury for a while, they subsided into quiet conflagration, which lasted till morning. Vaudreuil watched the result of his experiment from the steeple of the church at Beauport; then returned, dejected, to Quebec.

¹ Foligny, Journal mémoratif. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Oct. 1759. Journal du Siège (Bibliothèque de Hartwell).

Wolfe longed to fight his enemy; but his sagacious enemy would not gratify him. From the heights of Beauport, the rock of Quebec, or the summit of Cape Diamond, Montcalm could look down on the river and its shores as on a map, and watch each movement of the invaders. He was hopeful, perhaps confident; and for a month or more he wrote almost daily to Bourlamaque at Ticonderoga, in a cheerful, and often a jocose vein, mingling orders and instructions with pleasantries and bits of news. Yet his vigilance was unceasing. "We pass every night in bivouac, or else sleep in our clothes. Perhaps you are doing as much, my dear Bourlamaque."¹

Of the two commanders, Vaudreuil was the more sanguine, and professed full faith that all would go well. He too corresponded with Bourlamaque, to whom he gave his opinion, founded on the reports of deserters, that Wolfe had no chance of success unless Amherst should come to his aid. This he pronounced impossible; and he expressed a strong desire that the English would attack him, "so that we may rid ourselves of them at once."¹ He was courageous, except in the immediate presence of danger, and failed only when the crisis came.

¹ Montcalm à Bourlamaque, 27 Juin, 1759. All these letters are before me.

Wolfe, held in check at every other point, had one movement in his power. He could seize the heights of Point Levi, opposite the city; and this, along with his occupation of the Island of Orleans, would give him command of the Basin of Quebec. Thence also he could fire on the place across the St. Lawrence, which is here less than a mile wide. The movement was begun on the afternoon of the twenty-ninth, when, shivering in a north wind and a sharp frost, a part of Monckton's brigade was ferried over to Beaumont, on the south shore, and the rest followed in the morning. The rangers had a brush with a party of Canadians, whom they drove off, and the regulars then landed unopposed. Monckton ordered a proclamation, signed by Wolfe, to be posted on the door of the parish church. It called on the Canadians, in peremptory terms, to stand neutral in the contest, promised them, if they did so, full protection in property and religion, and threatened that, if they presumed to resist the invaders, their houses, goods, and harvests should be destroyed, and their churches despoiled. As soon as the troops were out of sight the inhabitants took down the placard and carried it to Vaudreuil.

¹ Vaudreuil à Bourlamaque, 8 Juillet, 1759.

The brigade marched along the river road to Point Levi, drove off a body of French and Indians posted in the church, and took possession of the houses and the surrounding heights. In the morning they were intrenching themselves, when they were greeted by a brisk fire from the edge of the woods. It came from a party of Indians, whom the rangers presently put to flight, and, imitating their own ferocity, scalped nine of them. Wolfe came over to the camp on the next day, went with an escort to the heights opposite Quebec, examined it with a spy-glass, and chose a position from which to bombard it. Cannon and mortars were brought ashore, fascines and gabions made, intrenchments thrown up, and batteries planted. Knox came over from the main camp, and says that he had "a most agreeable view of the city of Quebec. It is a very fair object for our artillery, particularly the lower town." But why did Wolfe wish to bombard it? Its fortifications were but little exposed to his fire, and to knock its houses, convents, and churches to pieces would bring him no nearer to his object. His guns at Point Levi could destroy the city, but could not capture it; yet doubtless they would have good moral effect, discourage the French, and cheer his own soldiers with the flattering belief that they were achieving something.

The guns of Quebec showered balls and bombs upon his workmen; but they still toiled on, and the French saw the fatal batteries fast growing to completion. The citizens, alarmed at the threatened destruction, begged the Governor for leave to cross the river and dislodge their assailants. At length he consented. A party of twelve or fifteen hundred was made up of armed burghers, Canadians from the camp, a few Indians, some pupils of the Seminary, and about a hundred volunteers from the regulars. Dumas, an experienced officer, took command of them; and, going up to Sillery, they crossed the river on the night of the twelfth of July. They had hardly climbed the heights of the south shore when they grew exceedingly nervous, though the enemy was still three miles off. The Seminary scholars fired on some of their own party, whom they mistook for English; and the same mishap was repeated a second and a third time. A panic seized the whole body, and Dumas could not control them. They turned and made for their canoes, rolling over each other as they rushed down the heights, and reappeared at Quebec at six in the morning, overwhelmed with despair and shame.¹

The presentiment of the unhappy burghers proved too true. The English batteries fell to their work, and the families of the town fled to the country for safety. In a single day eighteen houses and the cathedral were burned by exploding shells; and fiercer and fiercer the storm of fire and iron hailed upon Quebec.

¹ Événements de la Guerre en Canada (Hist. Soc. Quebec, 1861). Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Oct. 1759. L'Abeille, II. No. 14 (a publication of the Quebec Seminary). Journal du Siège de Québec (Bibliothèque de Hartwell). Panet, Journal du Siège. Foligny, Journal mémoratif. Memoirs of the Siege of Quebec, by John Johnson, Clerk and Quartermaster-Sergeant to the Fifty-eighth Regiment.

Wolfe did not rest content with distressing his enemy. With an ardor and a daring that no difficulties could cool, he sought means to strike an effective blow. It was nothing to lay Quebec in ruins if he could not defeat the army that protected it. To land from boats and attack Montcalm in front, through the mud of the Beauport flats or up the heights along the neighboring shore, was an enterprise too rash even for his temerity. It might, however, be possible to land below the cataract of Montmorenci, cross that stream higher up, and strike the French army in flank or rear; and he had no sooner secured his positions at the points of Levi and Orleans, than he addressed himself to this attempt.

On the eighth several frigates and a bomb-ketch took their stations before the camp of the Chevalier de Lévis, who, with his division of Canadian militia, occupied the heights along the St. Lawrence just above the cataract. Here they shelled and cannonaded him all day; though, from his elevated position, with very little effect. Towards evening the troops on the Point of Orleans broke up their camp. Major Hardy, with a detachment of marines, was left to hold that post, while the rest embarked at night in the boats of the fleet. They were the brigades of Townshend and Murray, consisting of five battalions, with a body of grenadiers, light infantry, and rangers,—in all three thousand men. They landed before day-break in front of the parish of L'Ange Gardien, a little below the cataract. The only opposition was from a troop of Canadians and Indians, whom they routed, after some loss, climbed the heights, gained the plateau above, and began to intrench themselves. A company of rangers, supported by detachments of regulars, was sent into the neighboring forest to protect the parties who were cutting fascines, and apparently, also, to look for a fording-place.

Lévis, with his Scotch-Jacobite aide-de-camp, Johnstone, had watched the movements of Wolfe from the heights across the cataract. Johnstone says that he asked his commander if he was sure there was no ford higher up on the Montmorenci, by which the English could cross. Lévis averred that there was none, and that he himself had examined the stream to its source; on which a Canadian who stood by whispered to the aide-de-camp: "The General is mistaken; there is a ford." Johnstone told this to Lévis, who would not believe it, and so browbeat the Canadian that he dared not repeat what he had said. Johnstone, taking him aside, told him to go and find somebody who had lately crossed the ford, and bring him at once to the General's quarters; whereupon he soon reappeared with a man who affirmed that he had crossed it the night before with a sack of wheat on his back. A detachment was immediately sent to the place, with orders to intrench itself, and Repentigny, lieutenant of Lévis, was posted not far off with eleven hundred Canadians.

Four hundred Indians passed the ford under the partisan Langlade, discovered Wolfe's detachment, hid themselves, and sent their commander to tell Repentigny that there was a body of English in the forest, who might all be destroyed if he would come over at once with his Canadians. Repentigny sent for orders to Lévis, and Lévis sent for orders to Vaudreuil, whose quarters were three or four miles distant. Vaudreuil answered that no risk should be run, and that he would come and see to the matter himself. It was about two hours before he arrived ; and meanwhile the Indians grew impatient, rose from their hiding-place, fired on the rangers, and drove them back with heavy loss upon the regulars, who stood their ground, and at last repulsed the assailants. The Indians recrossed the ford with thirty-six scalps. If Repentigny had advanced, and Lévis had followed with his main body, the consequences to the English might have been serious ; for, as Johnstone remarks, "a Canadian in the woods is worth three disciplined soldiers, as a soldier in a plain is worth three Canadians." Vaudreuil called a council of war. The question was whether an effort should be made to dislodge Wolfe's main force. Montcalm and the Governor were this time of one mind, and both thought it inexpedient to attack, with militia, a body of regular troops whose numbers and position were imperfectly known. Bigot gave his voice for the attack. He was overruled, and Wolfe was left to fortify himself in peace.¹

His occupation of the heights of Montmorenci exposed him to great risks. The left wing of his army at Point Levi was six miles from its right wing at the cataract, and Major Hardy's detachment on the Point of Orleans was between them, separated from each by a wide arm of the St. Lawrence. Any one of the three camps might be overpowered before the others could support it; and Hardy with his small force was above all in danger of being cut to pieces. But the French kept persistently on the defensive; and after the failure of Dumas to dislodge the English from Point Levi, Vaudreuil would not hear of another such attempt. Wolfe was soon well intrenched; but it was easier to defend himself than to strike at his enemy. Montcalm, when urged to attack him, is said to have answered: "Let him amuse himself where he is. If we drive him off he may go to some place where he can do us harm." His late movement, however, had a discouraging effect on the Canadians, who now for the first time began to desert. His batteries, too, played across the chasm of Montmorenci upon the left wing of the French army with an effect extremely annoying.

The position of the hostile forces was a remarkable one. They were separated by the vast gorge that opens upon the St. Lawrence; an amphitheatre of lofty precipices, their brows crested with forests, and their steep brown sides scantily feathered with stunted birch and fir. Into this abyss leaps the Montmorenci with one headlong plunge of nearly two hundred and fifty feet, a living column of snowy white, with its spray, its foam, its mists, and its rainbows; then spreads itself in broad thin sheets over a floor of rock and gravel, and creeps tamely to the St. Lawrence. It was but a gunshot across the gulf, and the sentinels on each side watched each other over the roar and turmoil of the cataract. Captain Knox, coming one day from Point Levi to receive orders from Wolfe, improved a spare hour to visit this marvel of nature. "I had very nigh paid dear for my inquisitiveness; for while I stood on the eminence I was hastily called to by one of our sentinels, when, throwing my eyes about, I saw a Frenchman creeping under the eastern extremity of their breastwork to fire at me. This obliged me to retire as fast as I could out of his reach, and, making up to the sentry to thank him for his attention, he told me the fellow had snapped his piece twice, and the second time it flashed in the pan at the instant I turned away from the Fall." Another officer, less fortunate, had a leg broken by a shot from the opposite cliffs.

¹ The above is from a comparison of the rather discordant accounts of Johnstone, the Journal tenu à l'Armée, the Journal of Panet, and that of the Hartwell Library. The last says that Lévis crossed the Montmorenci. If so, he accomplished nothing. This affair should not be confounded with a somewhat similar one which took place on the 26th.

Day after day went by, and the invaders made no progress. Flags of truce passed often between the hostile camps. "You will demolish the town, no doubt," said the bearer of one of them, "but you shall never get inside of it." To which Wolfe replied: "I will have Quebec if I stay here till the end of November." Sometimes the heat was intense, and sometimes there were floods of summer rain that inundated the tents. Along the river, from the Montmorenci to Point Levi, there were ceaseless artillery fights between gunboats, frigates, and batteries on shore. Bands of Indians infested the outskirts of the camps, killing sentries and patrols. The rangers chased them through the woods; there were brisk skirmishes, and scalps lost and won. Sometimes the regulars took part in these forest battles; and once it was announced, in orders of the day, that "the General has ordered two sheep and some rum to Captain Cosnan's company of grenadiers for the spirit they showed this morning in pushing those scoundrels of Indians." The Indians complained that the British soldiers were learning how to fight, and no longer stood still in a mass to be shot at, as in Braddock's time. The Canadian coureurs-de-bois mixed with their red allies and wore their livery. One of them was caught on the eighteenth. He was naked, daubed red and blue, and adorned with a bunch of painted feathers dangling from the top of his head. He and his companions used the scalping-knife as freely as the Indians themselves; nor were the New England rangers much behind them in this respect, till an order came from Wolfe forbidding "the inhuman practice of scalping, except when the enemy are Indians, or Canadians dressed like Indians."

A part of the fleet worked up into the Basin, beyond the Point of Orleans; and here, on the warm summer nights, officers and men watched the cannon flashing and thundering from the heights of Montmorenci on one side, and those of Point Levi on the other, and the bombs sailing through the air in fiery semicircles. Often the gloom was lighted up by the blaze of the burning houses of Quebec, kindled by incendiary shells. Both the lower and the upper town were nearly deserted by the inhabitants, some retreating into the country, and some into the suburb of St. Roch; while the Ursulines and Hospital nuns abandoned their convents to seek harborage beyond the range of shot. The city was a prey to robbers, who pilaged the empty houses, till an order came from headquarters promising the gallows to all who should be caught. News reached the French that Niagara was attacked, and that the army of Amherst was moving against Ticonderoga. The Canadians deserted more and more. They were disheartened by the defensive attitude in which both Vaudreuil and Montcalm steadily persisted; and accustomed as they were to rapid raids, sudden strokes, and a quick return to their homes, they tired of long weeks of inaction. The English patrols caught one of them as he was passing the time in fishing. "He seemed to be a subtle old rogue," says Knox, "of seventy years of age, as he told us. We plied him well with port wine, and then his heart was more open; and seeing that we laughed at the exaggerated accounts he had given us, he said he 'wished the affair was well over, one way or the other; that his countrymen were all discontented, and would either surrender, or disperse and act a neutral part, if it were not for the persuasions of their priests and the fear of being maltreated by the savages, with whom they are threatened on all occasions.'” A deserter reported on the nineteenth of July that nothing but dread of the Indians kept the Canadians in the camp.

Wolfe's proclamation, at first unavailing, was now taking effect. A large number of Canadian prisoners, brought in on the twenty-fifth, declared that their countrymen would gladly accept his offers but for the threats of their commanders that if they did so the Indians should be set upon them. The prisoners said further that “they had been under apprehension for several days past of having a body of four hundred barbarians sent to rifle their parish and habitations.”¹ Such threats were not wholly effectual. A French chronicler of the time says: “The Canadians showed their disgust every day, and deserted at every opportunity, in spite of the means taken to prevent them.” “The people were intimidated, seeing all our army kept in one body and solely on the defensive; while the English, though far less numerous, divided their forces, and undertook various bold enterprises without meeting resistance.”²

On the eighteenth the English accomplished a feat which promised important results. The

¹ Knox, I. 347; compare pp. 339, 341, 346.

² Journal du Siège (Bibliothèque de Hartwell).

French commanders had thought it impossible for any hostile ship to pass the batteries of Quebec; but about eleven o'clock at night, favored by the wind, and covered by a furious cannonade from Point Levi, the ship "Sutherland," with a frigate and several small vessels, sailed safely by and reached the river above the town. Here they at once attacked and destroyed a fireship and some small craft that they found there. Now, for the first time, it became necessary for Montcalm to weaken his army at Beauport by sending six hundred men, under Dumas, to defend the accessible points in the line of precipices between Quebec and Cap-Rouge. Several hundred more were sent on the next day, when it became known that the English had dragged a fleet of boats over Point Levi, launched them above the town, and despatched troops to embark in them. Thus a new feature was introduced into the siege operations, and danger had risen on a side where the French thought themselves safe. On the other hand, Wolfe had become more vulnerable than ever. His army was now divided, not into three parts, but into four, each so far from the rest that, in case of sudden attack, it must defend itself alone. That Montcalm did not improve his opportunity was apparently due to want of confidence in his militia.

The force above the town did not lie idle. On the night of the twentieth, Colonel Carleton, with six hundred men, rowed eighteen miles up the river, and landed at Pointe-aux-Trembles, on the north shore. Here some of the families of Quebec had sought asylum; and Wolfe had been told by prisoners that not only were stores in great quantity to be found here, but also letters and papers throwing light on the French plans. Carleton and his men drove off a band of Indians who fired on them, and spent a quiet day around the parish church; but found few papers, and still fewer stores. They withdrew towards evening, carrying with them nearly a hundred women, children, and old men; and they were no sooner gone than the Indians returned to plunder the empty houses of their unfortunate allies. The prisoners were treated with great kindness. The ladies among them were entertained at supper by Wolfe, who jested with them on the caution of the French generals, saying: "I have given good chances to attack me, and am surprised that they have not profited by them."¹ On the next day the prisoners were all sent to Quebec under a flag of truce.

Thus far Wolfe had refrained from executing the threats he had affixed the month before to the church of Beaumont. But now he issued another proclamation. It declared that the Canadians had shown themselves unworthy of the offers he had made them, and that he had therefore ordered his light troops to ravage their country and bring them prisoners to his camp. Such of the Canadian militia as belonged to the parishes near Quebec were now in a sad dilemma; for Montcalm threatened them on one side, and

¹ Journal tenu à l'Armée que commandoit feu M. le Marquis de Montcalm.

Wolfe on the other. They might desert to their homes, or they might stand by their colors; in the one case their houses were to be burned by French savages, and in the other by British light infantry.

Wolfe at once gave orders in accord with his late proclamation; but he commanded that no church should be profaned, and no woman or child injured. The first effects of his stern policy are thus recorded by Knox: "Major Dalling's light infantry brought in this afternoon to our camp two hundred and fifty male and female prisoners. Among this number was a very respectable looking priest, and about forty men fit to bear arms. There was almost an equal number of black cattle, with about seventy sheep and lambs, and a few horses. Brigadier Monckton entertained the reverend father and some other fashionable personages in his tent, and most humanely ordered refreshments to all the rest of the captives; which noble example was followed by the soldiery, who generously crowded about those unhappy people, sharing their provisions, rum, and tobacco with them. They were sent in the evening on board of transports in the river." Again, two days later: "Colonel Fraser's detachment returned this morning, and presented us with more scenes of distress and the dismal consequences of war, by a great number of wretched families, whom they brought in prisoners, with some of their effects, and near three hundred black cattle, sheep, hogs, and horses."

On the next night the attention of the excellent journalist was otherwise engaged. Vaudreuil tried again to burn the English fleet. "Late last night," writes Knox, under date of the twenty-eighth, "the enemy sent down a most formidable fireraft, which consisted of a parcel of schooners, shallops, and stages chained together. It could not be less than a hundred fathoms in length, and was covered with grenades, old swivels, gun and pistol barrels loaded up to their muzzles, and various other inventions and combustible matters. This seemed to be their last attempt against our fleet, which happily miscarried, as before ; for our gallant seamen, with their usual expertness, grappled them before they got down above a third part of the Basin, towed them safe to shore, and left them at anchor, continually repeating, All's well. A remarkable expression from some of these intrepid souls to their comrades on this occasion I must not omit, on account of its singular uncouthness ; namely : ' Damme, Jack, didst thee ever take hell in tow before ? ' "

According to a French account, this aquatic infernal machine consisted of seventy rafts, boats, and schooners. Its failure was due to no shortcoming on the part of its conductors ; who, under a brave Canadian named Courval, acted with coolness and resolution. Nothing saved the fleet but the courage of the sailors, swarming out in their boats to fight the approaching conflagration.

It was now the end of July. More than half the summer was gone, and Quebec seemed as far as ever beyond the grasp of Wolfe. Its buildings were in ruins, and the neighboring parishes were burned and ravaged; but its living rampart, the army of Montcalm, still lay in patient defiance along the shores of Beauport, while above the city every point where a wildcat could climb the precipices was watched and guarded, and Dumas with a thousand men held the impregnable heights of Cap-Rouge. Montcalm persisted in doing nothing that his enemy wished him to do. He would not fight on Wolfe's terms, and Wolfe resolved at last to fight him on his own; that is, to attack his camp in front.

The plan was desperate; for, after leaving troops enough to hold Point Levi and the heights of Montmorenci, less than five thousand men would be left to attack a position of commanding strength, where Montcalm at an hour's notice could collect twice as many to oppose them. But Wolfe had a boundless trust in the disciplined valor of his soldiers, and an utter scorn of the militia who made the greater part of his enemy's force.

Towards the Montmorenci the borders of the St. Lawrence are, as we have seen, extremely high and steep. At a mile from the gorge of the cataract there is, at high tide, a strand, about the eighth of a mile wide, between the foot of these heights and the river; and beyond this strand the receding tide lays bare a tract of mud nearly half a mile wide. At the edge of the dry ground the French had built a redoubt mounted with cannon, and there were other similar works on the strand a quarter of a mile nearer the cataract. Wolfe could not see from the river that these redoubts were commanded by the musketry of the intrenchments along the brink of the heights above. These intrenchments were so constructed that they swept with cross-fires the whole face of the declivity, which was covered with grass, and was very steep. Wolfe hoped that, if he attacked one of the redoubts, the French would come down to defend it, and so bring on a general engagement; or, if they did not, that he should gain an opportunity of reconnoitring the heights to find some point where they could be stormed with a chance of success.

In front of the gorge of the Montmorenci there was a ford during several hours of low tide, so that troops from the adjoining English camp might cross to co-operate with their comrades landing in boats from Point Levi and the Island of Orleans. On the morning of the thirty-first of July, the tide then being at the flood, the French saw the ship "Centurion," of sixty-four guns, anchor near the Montmorenci and open fire on the redoubts. Then two armed transports, each of fourteen guns, stood in as close as possible to the first redoubt and fired upon it, stranding as the tide went out, till in the afternoon they lay bare upon the mud. At the same time a battery of more than forty heavy pieces, planted on the lofty promontory beyond the Montmorenci, began a furious cannonade upon the flank of the French intrenchments. It did no great harm, however, for the works were protected by a great number of traverses, which stopped the shot ; and the Canadians, who manned this part of the lines, held their ground with excellent steadiness.

About eleven o'clock a fleet of boats filled with troops, chiefly from Point Levi, appeared in the river and hovered off the shore west of the parish church of Beauport, as if meaning to land there. Montcalm was perplexed, doubting whether the real attack was to be made here, or toward the Montmorenci. Hour after hour the boats moved to and fro, to increase his doubts and hide the real design ; but he soon became convinced that the camp of Lévis at the Montmorenci was the true object of his enemy ; and about two o'clock he went thither, greeted as he rode along the lines by shouts of Vive notre Général ! Lévis had already made preparations for defence with his usual skill. His Canadians were reinforced by the battalions of Béarn, Guienne, and Royal Roussillon ; and, as the intentions of Wolfe became certain, the right of the camp was nearly abandoned, the main strength of the army being gathered between the river of Beauport and the Montmorenci, where, according to a French writer, there were, towards the end of the afternoon, about twelve thousand men.¹

At half-past five o'clock the tide was out, and the crisis came. The batteries across the Montmorenci, the distant batteries of Point Levi, the cannon of the "Centurion," and those of the two stranded ships, all opened together with redoubled fury. The French batteries replied; and, amid this deafening roar of artillery, the English boats set their troops ashore at the edge of the broad tract of sedgy mud that the receding river had left bare. At the same time a column of two thousand men was seen, a mile away, moving in perfect order across the Montmorenci ford. The first troops that landed from the boats were thirteen companies of grenadiers and a detachment of Royal Americans. They dashed swiftly forward; while at some distance behind came Monckton's brigade, composed of the fifteenth, or Amherst's regiment, and the seventy-eighth, or Fraser's Highlanders. The day had been fair and warm; but the sky was now thick with clouds, and large rain-drops began to fall, the precursors of a summer storm.

¹ Panet, Journal.

With the utmost precipitation, without orders, and without waiting for Monckton's brigade to come up, the grenadiers in front made a rush for the redoubt near the foot of the hill. The French abandoned it; but the assailants had no sooner gained their prize than the thronged heights above blazed with musketry, and a tempest of bullets fell among them. Nothing daunted, they dashed forward again, reserving their fire, and struggling to climb the steep ascent; while, with yells and shouts of Vive le Roi! the troops and Canadians at the top poured upon them a hailstorm of musket-balls and buckshot, and dead and wounded in numbers rolled together down the slope. At that instant the clouds burst, and the rain fell in torrents. "We could not see half way down the hill," says the Chevalier Johnstone, who was at this part of the line. Ammunition was wet on both sides, and the grassy steeps became so slippery that it was impossible to climb them. The English say that the storm saved the French; the French, with as much reason, that it saved the English.

The baffled grenadiers drew back into the redoubt. Wolfe saw the madness of persisting, and ordered a retreat. The rain ceased, and troops of Indians came down the heights to scalp the fallen. Some of them ran towards Lieutenant Peyton, of the Royal Americans, as he lay disabled by a musket-shot. With his double-barrelled gun he brought down two of his assailants, when a Highland sergeant snatched him in his arms, dragged him half a mile over the mud-flats, and placed him in one of the boats. A friend of Peyton, Captain Ochterlony, had received a mortal wound, and an Indian would have scalped him but for the generous intrepidity of a soldier of the battalion of Guienne; who, seizing the enraged savage, held him back till several French officers interposed, and had the dying man carried to a place of safety.

The English retreated in good order, after setting fire to the two stranded vessels. Those of the grenadiers and Royal Americans who were left alive rowed for the Point of Orleans; the fifteenth regiment rowed for Point Levi; and the Highlanders, led by Wolfe himself, joined the column from beyond the Montmorenci, placing themselves in its rear as it slowly retired along the flats and across the ford, the Indians yelling and the French shouting from the heights, while the British waved their hats, daring them to come down and fight.

The grenadiers and the Royal Americans, who had borne the brunt of the fray, bore also nearly all the loss; which, in proportion to their numbers, was enormous. Knox reports it at four hundred and forty-three, killed, wounded, and missing, including one colonel, eight captains, twenty-one lieutenants, and three ensigns.

Vaudreuil, delighted, wrote to Bourlamaque an account of the affair. "I have no more anxiety about Quebec. M. Wolfe, I can assure you, will make no progress. Luckily for him, his prudence saved him from the consequences of his mad enterprise, and he contented himself with losing about five hundred of his best soldiers. Deserters say that he will try us again in a few days. That is what we want; he'll find somebody to talk to (il trouvera à qui parler)."

NOTE.—Among the killed in this affair was Edward Botwood, sergeant in the grenadiers of the forty-seventh, or Lascelles' regiment. "Ned Botwood" was well known among his comrades as a poet; and the following lines of his, written on the eve of the expedition to Quebec, continued to be favorites with the British troops during the War of the Revolution (see Historical Magazine, II., First Series, 164). It may be observed here that the war produced a considerable quantity of indifferent verse on both sides. On that of the English it took the shape of occasional ballads, such as "Bold General Wolfe," printed on broadsides, or of patriotic effusions scattered through magazines and newspapers, while the French celebrated all their victories with songs.

HOT STUFF.

AIR, — Lilies of France.

Come, each death-doing dog who dares venture his neck,
 Come, follow the hero that goes to Quebec;
 Jump aboard of the transports, and loose every sail,
 Pay your debts at the tavern by giving leg-bail;
 And ye that love fighting shall soon have enough:
 Wolfe commands us, my boys ; we shall give them Hot Stuff.

Up the River St. Lawrence our troops shall advance,
 To the Grenadiers' March we will teach them to dance.
 Cape Breton we have taken, and next we will try
 At their capital to give them another black eye.
 Vaudreuil, 't is in vain you pretend to look gruff, —
 Those are coming who know how to give you Hot Stuff.

With powder in his periwig, and snuff in his nose,
 Monsieur will run down our descent to oppose ;
 And the Indians will come : but the light infantry
 Will soon oblige them to betake to a tree.
 From such rascals as these may we fear a rebuff ?
 Advance, grenadiers, and let fly your Hot Stuff !

When the forty-seventh regiment is dashing ashore,
 While bullets are whistling and cannons do roar,
 Says Montcalm : " Those are Shirley's — I know the lappels."
 " You lie," says Ned Botwood, " we belong to Lascelles' !
 Tho' our cloathing is changed, yet we scorn a powder-puff ;
 So at you, ye b——s, here 's give you Hot Stuff."

On the repulse at Montmorenci, Wolfe to Pitt, 2 Sept 1759. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Oct. 1759. Panet, Journal du Siège. Johnstone, Dialogue in Hades. Journal tenu à l'Armée, etc. Journal of the Siege of Quebec, by a Gentleman in an eminent Station on the Spot. Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749–1760. Fraser, Journal of the Siege. Journal du Siège d'après un MS. déposé à la Bibliothèque Hartwell. Foligny, Journal mémoratif. Journal of Transactions at the Siege of Quebec, in Notes and Queries, XX. 164. John Johnson, Memoirs of the Siege of Quebec. Journal of an Expedition on the River St. Lawrence. An Authentic Account of the Expedition against Quebec, by a Volunteer on that Expedition. J. Gibson to Governor Lawrence, 1 Aug. 1759. Knox, I. 354. Mante, 244.

CHAPTER XXVI.

1759.

AMHERST. NIAGARA.

AMHERST ON LAKE GEORGE. — CAPTURE OF TICONDEROGA AND CROWN POINT. — DELAYS OF AMHERST. — NIAGARA EXPEDITION. — LA CORNE ATTACKS OSWEGO. — HIS REPULSE. — NIAGARA BESIEGED. — AUBRY COMES TO ITS RELIEF. — BATTLE. — ROUT OF THE FRENCH. — THE FORT TAKEN. — ISLE-AUX-NOIX. — AMHERST ADVANCES TO ATTACK IT. — STORM. — THE ENTERPRISE ABANDONED. — ROGERS ATTACKS ST. FRANCIS. — DESTROYS THE TOWN. — SUFFERINGS OF THE RANGERS.

PITT had directed that, while Quebec was attacked, an attempt should be made to penetrate into Canada by way of Ticonderoga and Crown Point. Thus the two armies might unite in the heart of the colony, or, at least, a powerful diversion might be effected in behalf of Wolfe. At the same time Oswego was to be re-established, and the possession of Fort Duquesne, or Pittsburg, secured by reinforcements and supplies; while Amherst, the commander-in-chief, was further directed to pursue any other enterprise which in his opinion would weaken the enemy, without detriment to the main objects of the campaign.¹ He accordingly resolved to attempt the capture of Niagara. Brigadier Prideaux was charged with this stroke; Brigadier Stanwix was sent to conduct the operations for the relief of Pittsburg; and Amherst himself prepared to lead the grand central advance against Ticonderoga, Crown Point, and Montreal.¹

¹ Pitt to Amherst, 23 Jan., 10 March, 1759.

Towards the end of June he reached that valley by the head of Lake George which for five years past had been the annual mustering-place of armies. Here were now gathered about eleven thousand men, half regulars and half provincials,² drilling every day, firing by platoons, firing at marks, practising manœuvres in the woods; going out on scouting parties, bathing parties, fishing parties; gathering wild herbs to serve for greens, cutting brushwood and meadow hay to make hospital beds. The sick were ordered on certain mornings to repair to the surgeon's tent, there, in prompt succession, to swallow such doses as he thought appropriate to their several ailments; and it was further ordered that "every fair day they that can walk be paraded together and marched down to the lake to wash their hands and faces." Courts-martial were numerous; culprits were flogged at the head of each regiment in turn, and occasionally one was shot. A frequent employment was the cutting of spruce tops to make spruce beer. This innocent beverage was reputed sovereign against scurvy; and such was the fame of its virtues that a copious supply of the West Indian molasses used in concocting it was thought indispensable to every army or garrison in the wilderness. Throughout this campaign it is repeatedly mentioned in general orders, and the soldiers are promised that they shall have as much of it as they want at a halfpenny a quart.¹

¹ Amherst to Pitt, 19 June, 1759. Amherst to Stanwix, 6 May, 1759.

² Mante, 210.

The rear of the army was well protected from insult. Fortified posts were built at intervals of three or four miles along the road to Fort Edward, and especially at the station called Half-way Brook; while, for the whole distance, a broad belt of wood on both sides was cut down and burned, to deprive a skulking enemy of cover. Amherst was never long in one place without building a fort there. He now began one, which proved wholly needless, on that flat rocky hill where the English made their intrenched camp during the siege of Fort William Henry. Only one bastion of it was ever finished, and this is still shown to tourists under the name of Fort George.

The army embarked on Saturday, the twenty-first of July. The Reverend Benjamin Pomeroy watched their departure in some concern, and wrote on Monday to Abigail, his wife: "I could wish for more appearance of dependence on God than was observable among them; yet I hope God will grant deliverance unto Israel by them." There was another military pageant, another long procession of boats and banners, among the mountains and islands of Lake George. Night found them near the outlet ; and here they lay till morning, tossed unpleasantly on waves ruffled by a summer gale. At daylight they landed, beat back a French detachment, and marched by the portage road to the saw-mill at the waterfall. There was little resistance. They occupied the heights, and then advanced to the famous line of intrenchment against which the army of Abercromby had hurled itself in vain. These works had been completely reconstructed, partly of earth, and partly of logs. Amherst's followers were less numerous than those of his predecessor, while the French commander, Bourlamaque, had a force nearly equal to that of Montcalm in the summer before ; yet he made no attempt to defend the intrenchment, and the English, encamping along its front, found it an excellent shelter from the cannon of the fort beyond.

¹ Orderly Book of Commissary Wilson in the Expedition against Ticonderoga, 1759. Journal of Samuel Warner, a Massachusetts Soldier, 1759. General and Regimental Orders, Army of Major-General Amherst, 1759. Diary of Sergeant Merriman, of Ruggles's Regiment, 1759. I owe to William L. Stone, Esq., the use of the last two curious documents.

Amherst brought up his artillery and began approaches in form, when, on the night of the twenty-third, it was found that Bourlamaque had retired down Lake Champlain, leaving four hundred men under Hebecourt to defend the place as long as possible. This was in obedience to an order from Vaudreuil, requiring him on the approach of the English to abandon both Ticonderoga and Crown Point, retreat to the outlet of Lake Champlain, take post at Isle-aux-Noix, and there defend himself to the last extremity;¹ a course unquestionably the best that could have been taken, since obstinacy in holding Ticonderoga might have involved the surrender of Bourlamaque's whole force, while Isle-aux-Noix offered rare advantages for defence.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 8 Nov. 1759. Instructions pour M. de Bourlamaque, 20 Mai, 1759, signé Vaudreuil. Montcalm à Bourlamaque, 4 Juin, 1759.

The fort fired briskly; a cannon-shot killed Colonel Townshend, and a few soldiers were killed and wounded by grape and bursting shells; when, at dusk on the evening of the twenty-sixth, an unusual movement was seen among the garrison, and, about ten o'clock, three deserters came in great excitement to the English camp. They reported that Hebecourt and his soldiers were escaping in their boats, and that a match was burning in the magazine to blow Ticonderoga to atoms. Amherst offered a hundred guineas to any one of them who would point out the match, that it might be cut; but they shrank from the perilous venture. All was silent till eleven o'clock, when a broad, fierce glare burst on the night, and a roaring explosion shook the promontory; then came a few breathless moments, and then the fragments of Fort Ticonderoga fell with clatter and splash on the water and the land. It was but one bastion, however, that had been thus hurled skyward. The rest of the fort was little hurt, though the barracks and other combustible parts were set on fire, and by the light the French flag was seen still waving on the rampart.¹ A sergeant of the light infantry, braving the risk of other explosions, went and brought it off. Thus did this redoubted stronghold of France fall at last into English hands, as in all likelihood it would have done a year sooner, if Amherst had commanded in Abercromby's place; for, with the deliberation that marked all his proceedings, he would have sat down before Montcalm's wooden wall and knocked it to splinters with his cannon.

¹ Journal of Colonel Amherst (brother of General Amherst). Vaudreuil au Ministre, 8 Nov. 1759. Amherst to Prideaux, 28 July, 1759. Amherst to Pitt, 27 July, 1759. Mante, 213. Knox, I., 397-403. Vaudreuil à Bourlamaque, 19 Juin, 1759.

He now set about repairing the damaged works and making ready to advance on Crown Point; when on the first of August his scouts told him that the enemy had abandoned this place also, and retreated northward down the lake.¹ Well pleased, he took possession of the deserted fort, and, in the animation of success, thought for a moment of keeping the promise he had given to Pitt "to make an irruption into Canada with the utmost vigor and despatch."² Wolfe, his brother in arms and his friend, was battling with the impossible under the rocks of Quebec, and every motive, public and private, impelled Amherst to push to his relief, not counting costs, or balancing risks too nicely. He was ready enough to spur on others, for he wrote to Gage: "We must all be alert and active day and night; if we all do our parts the French must fall;"³ but, far from doing his, he set the army to building a new fort at Crown Point, telling them that it would "give plenty, peace, and quiet to His Majesty's subjects for ages to come." ¹ Then he began three small additional forts, as outworks to the first, sent two parties to explore the sources of the Hudson; one party to explore Otter Creek; another to explore South Bay, which was already well known; another to make a road across what is now the State of Vermont, from Crown Point to Charlestown, or "Number Four," on the Connecticut; and another to widen and improve the old French road between Crown Point and Ticonderoga. His industry was untiring; a great deal of useful work was done: but the essential task of making a diversion to aid the army of Wolfe was needlessly postponed.

¹ Amherst to Pitt, 5 Aug. 1759.

² Ibid., 19 June, 1759.

³ Amherst to Gage, 1 Aug. 1759.

It is true that some delay was inevitable. The French had four armed vessels on the lake, and this made it necessary to provide an equal or superior force to protect the troops on their way to Isle-aux-Noix. Captain Loring, the English naval commander, was therefore ordered to build a brigantine; and, this being thought insufficient, he was directed to add a kind of floating battery, moved by sweeps. Three weeks later, in consequence of farther information concerning the force of the French vessels, Amherst ordered an armed sloop to be put on the stocks; and this involved a long delay. The saw-mill at Ticonderoga was to furnish planks for the intended navy; but, being overtasked in sawing timber for the new works at Crown Point, it was continually breaking down. Hence much time was lost, and autumn was well advanced before Loring could launch his vessels.¹

¹ General Orders, 13 Aug. 1759.

Meanwhile news had come from Prideaux and the Niagara expedition. That officer had been ordered to ascend the Mohawk with five thousand regulars and provincials, leave a strong garrison at Fort Stanwix, on the Great Carrying Place, establish posts at both ends of Lake Oneida, descend the Onondaga to Oswego, leave nearly half his force there under Colonel Haldimand, and proceed with the rest to attack Niagara.² These orders he accomplished. Haldimand remained to reoccupy the spot that Montcalm had made desolate three years before; and, while preparing to build a fort, he barricaded his camp with pork and flour barrels, lest the enemy should make a dash upon him from their station at the head of the St. Lawrence Rapids. Such an attack was probable; for if the French could seize Oswego, the return of Prideaux from Niagara would be cut off, and when his small stock of provisions had failed, he would be reduced to extremity. Saint-Luc de la Corne left the head of the Rapids early in July with a thousand French and Canadians and a body of Indians, who soon made their appearance among the stumps and bushes that surrounded the camp at Oswego. The priest Piquet was of the party; and five deserters declared that he solemnly blessed them, and told them to give the English no quarter.³ Some valuable time was lost in bestowing the benediction; yet Haldimand's men were taken by surprise. Many of them were dispersed in the woods, cutting timber for the intended fort; and it might have gone hard with them had not some of La Corne's Canadians become alarmed and rushed back to their boats, oversetting Father Piquet on the way.¹ These being rallied, the whole party ensconced itself in a tract of felled trees so far from the English that their fire did little harm. They continued it about two hours, and resumed it the next morning; when, three cannon being brought to bear on them, they took to their boats and disappeared, having lost about thirty killed and wounded, including two officers and La Corne himself, who was shot in the thigh. The English loss was slight.

¹ Amherst to Pitt, 22 Oct. 1759. This letter, which is in the form of a journal, covers twenty-one folio pages.

² Instructions of Amherst to Prideaux, 17 May, 1759. Prideaux to Haldimand, 30 June, 1759.

³ Journal of Colonel Amherst.

Prideaux safely reached Niagara, and laid siege to it. It was a strong fort, lately rebuilt in regular form by an excellent officer, Captain Pouchot, of the battalion of Béarn, who commanded it. It stood where the present fort stands, in the angle formed by the junction of the River Niagara with Lake Ontario, and was held by about six hundred men, well supplied with provisions and munitions of war.² Higher up the river, a mile and a half above the cataract, there was another fort, called Little Niagara, built of wood, and commanded by the half-breed officer, Joncaire-Chabert, who with his brother, Joncaire-Clauzonne, and a numerous clan of Indian relatives, had so long thwarted the efforts of Johnson to engage the Five Nations in the English cause. But recent English successes had had their effect. Joncaire's influence was waning, and Johnson was now in Prideaux's camp with nine hundred Five Nation warriors pledged to fight the French. Joncaire, finding his fort untenable, burned it, and came with his garrison and his Indian friends to reinforce Niagara.¹

¹ Pouchot, II. 130. Compare Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760; N. Y. Col. Docs., VII. 395; and Letter from Oswego, in Boston Evening Post, No. 1,248.

² Pouchot says 515, besides 60 men from Little Niagara; Vaudreuil gives a total of 589.

Pouchot had another resource, on which he confidently relied. In obedience to an order from Vaudreuil, the French population of the Illinois, Detroit, and other distant posts, joined with troops of Western Indians, had come down the Lakes to recover Pittsburg, undo the work of Forbes, and restore French ascendancy on the Ohio. Pittsburg had been in imminent danger; nor was it yet safe, though General Stanwix was sparing no effort to succor it.² These mixed bands of white men and red, bushrangers and savages, were now gathered, partly at Le Bœuf and Venango, but chiefly at Presquisle, under command of Aubry, Ligneris, Marin, and other partisan chiefs, the best in Canada. No sooner did Pouchot learn that the English were coming to attack him than he sent a messenger to summon them all to his aid.³

¹ Pouchot, II. 52, 59. Procès de Bigot, Cadet, et autres, Mémoire pour Daniel de Joncaire-Chabert.

² Letters of Colonel Hugh Mercer, commanding at Pittsburg, January-June, 1759. Letters of Stanwix, May-July, 1759. Letter from Pittsburg, in Boston News Letter, No. 3,023. Narrative of John Ormsby.

³ Pouchot, II. 46.

The siege was begun in form, though the English engineers were so incompetent that the trenches, as first laid out, were scoured by the fire of the place, and had to be made anew.¹ At last the batteries opened fire. A shell from a coehorn burst prematurely, just as it left the mouth of the piece, and a fragment striking Prideaux on the head, killed him instantly. Johnson took command in his place, and made up in energy what he lacked in skill. In two or three weeks the fort was in extremity. The rampart was breached, more than a hundred of the garrison were killed or disabled, and the rest were exhausted with want of sleep. Pouchot watched anxiously for the promised succors; and on the morning of the twenty-fourth of July a distant firing told him that they were at hand.

Aubry and Ligneris, with their motley following, had left Presquisle a few days before, to the number, according to Vaudreuil, of eleven hundred French and two hundred Indians.² Among them was a body of colony troops; but the Frenchmen of the party were chiefly traders and bushrangers from the West, connecting links between civilization and savagery; some of them indeed were mere white Indians, imbued with the ideas and morals of the wigwam, wearing hunting-shirts of smoked deer-skin embroidered with quills of the Canada porcupine, painting their faces black and red, tying eagle feathers in their long hair, or plastering it on their temples with a compound of vermilion and glue. They were excellent woodsmen, skilful hunters, and perhaps the best bushfighters in all Canada.

¹ Rutherford to Haldimand, 14 July, 1759. Prideaux was extremely disgusted. Prideaux to Haldimand, 13 July, 1759. Allan Maclean, of the Highlanders, calls the engineers "fools and blockheads, G—d d—n them." Maclean to Haldimand, 21 July, 1759.

² "Il n'y avoit que 1,100 François et 200 sauvages." Vaudreuil au Ministre, 30 Oct. 1759. Johnson says "1,200 men, with a number of Indians." Johnson to Amherst, 25 July, 1759. Portneuf, commanding at Presquisle, wrote to Pouchot that there were 1,600 French and 1,200 Indians. Pouchot, II. 94. A letter from Aubry to Pouchot put the whole at 2,500, half of them Indians. Historical Magazine, V., Second Série, 199.

When Pouchot heard the firing, he went with a wounded artillery officer to the bastion next the river; and as the forest had been cut away for a great distance, they could see more than a mile and a half along the shore. There, by glimpses among trees and bushes, they descried bodies of men, now advancing, and now retreating; Indians in rapid movement, and the smoke of guns, the sound of which reached their ears in heavy volleys, or a sharp and angry rattle. Meanwhile the English cannon had ceased their fire, and the silent trenches seemed deserted, as if their occupants were gone to meet the advancing foe. There was a call in the fort for volunteers to sally and destroy the works; but no sooner did they show themselves along the covered way than the seemingly abandoned trenches were thronged with men and bayonets, and the attempt was given up. The distant firing lasted half an hour, then ceased, and Pouchot remained in suspense; till, at two in the afternoon, a friendly Onondaga, who had passed unnoticed through the English lines, came to him with the announcement that the French and their allies had been routed and cut to pieces. Pouchot would not believe him.

Nevertheless his tale was true. Johnson, besides his Indians, had with him about twenty-three hundred men, whom he was forced to divide into three separate bodies, — one to guard the bateaux, one to guard the trenches, and one to fight Aubry and his band. This last body consisted of the provincial light infantry and the pickets, two companies of grenadiers, and a hundred and fifty men of the forty-sixth regiment, all under command of Colonel Massey.¹ They took post behind an abattis at a place called La Belle Famille, and the Five Nation warriors placed themselves on their flanks. These savages had shown signs of disaffection; and when the enemy approached, they opened a parley with the French Indians, which, however, soon ended, and both sides raised the war-whoop. The fight was brisk for a while; but at last Aubry's men broke away in a panic. The French officers seem to have made desperate efforts to retrieve the day, for nearly all of them were killed or captured; while their followers, after heavy loss, fled to their canoes and boats above the cataract, hastened back to Lake Erie, burned Presquisle, Le Bœuf, and Venango, and, joined by the garrisons of those forts, retreated to Detroit, leaving the whole region of the upper Ohio in undisputed possession of the English.

¹ Johnson to Amherst, 25 July, 1759. Knox, II. 135. Captain Delancey to ———, 25 July, 1759. This writer commanded the light infantry in the fight.

At four o'clock on the day of the battle, after a furious cannonade on both sides, a trumpet sounded from the trenches, and an officer approached the fort with a summons to surrender. He brought also a paper containing the names of the captive French officers, though some of them were spelled in a way that defied recognition. Pouchot, feigning incredulity, sent an officer of his own to the English camp, who soon saw unanswerable proof of the disaster; for here, under a shelter of leaves and boughs near the tent of Johnson, sat Ligneris, severely wounded, with Aubry, Villiers, Montigny, Marin, and their companions in misfortune, — in all, sixteen officers, four cadets, and a surgeon.¹

Pouchot had now no choice but surrender. By the terms of the capitulation, the garrison were to be sent prisoners to New York, though honors of war were granted them in acknowledgment of their courageous conduct. There was a special stipulation that they should be protected from the Indians, of whom they stood in the greatest terror, lest the massacre of Fort William Henry should be avenged upon them. Johnson restrained his dangerous allies, and, though the fort was pillaged, no blood was shed.

The capture of Niagara was an important stroke. Thenceforth Detroit, Michillimackinac, the Illinois, and all the other French interior posts, were severed from Canada, and left in helpless isolation ; but Amherst was not yet satisfied. On hearing of Prideaux's death he sent Brigadier Gage to supersede Johnson and take command on Lake Ontario, directing him to descend the St. Lawrence, attack the French posts at the head of the rapids, and hold them if possible for the winter. The attempt was difficult ; for the French force on the St. Lawrence was now greater than that which Gage could bring against it, after providing for the safety of Oswego and Niagara. Nor was he by nature prone to dashing and doubtful enterprise. He reported that the movement was impossible, much to the disappointment of Amherst, who seemed to expect from subordinates an activity greater than his own.¹

¹ Johnson gives the names in his private Diary, printed in Stone, Life of Johnson, II. 394. Compare Pouchot, II. 105, 106. Letter from Niagara, in Boston Evening Post, No. 1,250. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 30 Oct. 1759.

He, meanwhile, was working at his fort at Crown Point, while the season crept away, and Bourlamaque lay ready to receive him at Isle-aux-Noix. "I wait his coming with impatience," writes the French commander, "though I doubt if he will venture to attack a post where we are intrenched to the teeth, and armed with a hundred pieces of cannon."² Bourlamaque now had with him thirty-five hundred men, in a position of great strength. Isle-aux-Noix, planted in mid-channel of the Richelieu soon after it issues from Lake Champlain, had been diligently fortified since the spring. On each side of it was an arm of the river, closed against an enemy with chevaux-de-frise. To attack it in front in the face of its formidable artillery would be a hazardous attempt, and the task of reducing it was likely to be a long one. The French force in these parts had lately received accessions. After the fall of Niagara the danger seemed so great, both in the direction of Lake Ontario and that of Lake Champlain, that Lévis had been sent up from Quebec with eight hundred men to command the whole department of Montreal.¹ A body of troops and militia was encamped opposite that town, ready to march towards either quarter, as need might be, while the abundant crops of the neighboring parishes were harvested by armed bands, ready at a word to drop the sickle for the gun.

¹ Amherst to Gage, 28 July, 1 Aug., 14 Aug., 11 Sept. 1759. Diary of Sir William Johnson, in Stone, Life of Johnson, II. 394-429.

² Bourlamaque à (Bernetz?), 22 Sept. 1759.

Thus the promised advance of Amherst into Canada would be not without its difficulties, even when his navy, too tardily begun, should be ready to act its part. But if he showed no haste in succoring Wolfe, he at least made some attempts to communicate with him. Early in August he wrote him a letter, which Ensign Hutchins, of the rangers, carried to him in about a month by the long and circuitous route of the Kennebec, and which, after telling the news of the campaign, ended thus: "You may depend on my doing all I can for effectually reducing Canada. Now is the time!"² Amherst soon after tried another expedient, and sent Captains Kennedy and Hamilton with a flag of truce and a message of peace to the Abenakis of St. Francis, who, he thought, won over by these advances, might permit the two officers to pass unmolested to Quebec. But the Abenakis seized them and carried them prisoners to Montreal; on which Amherst sent Major Robert Rogers and a band of rangers to destroy their town.¹

¹ Montcalm à Bourlamaque, 9 Août, 1759. Rigaud à Bourlamaque, 14 Août, 1759. Lévis à Bourlamaque, 25 Août, 1759.

² Amherst to Wolfe, 7 Aug. 1759.

It was the eleventh of October before the miniature navy of Captain Loring — the floating battery, the brig, and the sloop that had been begun three weeks too late — was ready for service. They sailed at once to look for the enemy. The four French vessels made no resistance. One of them succeeded in reaching Isle-aux-Noix; one was run aground; and two were sunk by their crews, who escaped to the shore. Amherst, meanwhile, leaving the provincials to work at the fort, embarked with the regulars in bateaux, and proceeded on his northern way till, on the evening of the twelfth, a head-wind began to blow, and, rising to a storm, drove him for shelter into Ligonier Bay, on the west side of the lake.² On the thirteenth, it blew a gale. The lake raged like an angry sea, and the frail bateaux, fit only for smooth water, could not have lived a moment. Through all the next night the gale continued, with floods of driving rain. “I hope it will soon change,” wrote Amherst on the fifteenth, “for I have no time to lose." He was right. He had waited till the season of autumnal storms, when nature was more dangerous than man. On the sixteenth there was frost, and the wind did not abate. On the next morning it shifted to the south, but soon turned back with violence to the north, and the ruffled lake put on a look of winter, "which determined me," says the General, "not to lose time by striving to get to the Isle-aux-Noix, where I should arrive too late to force the enemy from their post, but to return to Crown Point and complete the works there." This he did, and spent the remnant of the season in the congenial task of finishing the fort, of which the massive remains still bear witness to his industry.

¹ Amherst to Pitt, 22 Oct. 1759. Rogers, Journals, 144.

² Orderly Book of Commissary Wilson.

When Lévis heard that the English army had fallen back, he wrote, well pleased, to Bourlamaque: "I don't know how General Amherst will excuse himself to his Court, but I am very glad he let us alone, because the Canadians are so backward that you could count on nobody but the regulars."¹

Concerning this year's operations on the Lakes, it may be observed that the result was not what the French feared, or what the British colonists had cause to hope. If, at the end of winter, Amherst had begun, as he might have done, the building of armed vessels at the head of the navigable waters of Lake Champlain, where Whitehall now stands, he would have had a navy ready to his hand before August, and would have been able to follow the retreating French without delay, and attack them at Isle-aux-Noix before they had finished their fortifications. And if, at the same time, he had directed Prideaux, instead of attacking Niagara, to co-operate with him by descending the St. Lawrence towards Montreal, the prospect was good that the two armies would have united at that place, and ended the campaign by the reduction of all Canada. In this case Niagara and all the western posts would have fallen without a blow.

¹ Lévis à Bourlamaque, 1 Nov. 1759.

Major Robert Rogers, sent in September to punish the Abenakis of St. Francis, had addressed himself to the task with his usual vigor. These Indians had been settled for about three quarters of a century on the River St. Francis, a few miles above its junction with the St. Lawrence. They were nominal Christians, and had been under the control of their missionaries for three generations ; but though zealous and sometimes fanatical in their devotion to the forms of Romanism, they remained thorough savages in dress, habits, and character. They were the scourge of the New England borders, where they surprised and burned farmhouses and small hamlets, killed men, women, and children without distinction, carried others prisoners to their village, subjected them to the torture of "running the gantlet," and compelled them to witness dances of triumph around the scalps of parents, children, and friends.

Amherst's instructions to Rogers contained the following : "Remember the barbarities that have been committed by the enemy's Indian scoundrels.

Take your revenge, but don't forget that, though those dastardly villains have promiscuously murdered women and children of all ages, it is my order that no women or children be killed or hurt."

Rogers and his men set out in whaleboats, and, eluding the French armed vessels, then in full activity, came, on the tenth day, to Missisquoi Bay, at the north end of Lake Champlain. Here he hid his boats, leaving two friendly Indians to watch them from a distance, and inform him should the enemy discover them. He then began his march for St. Francis, when, on the evening of the second day, the two Indians overtook him with the startling news that a party of about four hundred French had found the boats, and that half of them were on his tracks in hot pursuit. It was certain that the alarm would soon be given, and other parties sent to cut him off. He took the bold resolution of outmarching his pursuers, pushing straight for St. Francis, striking it before succors could arrive, and then returning by Lake Memphremagog and the Connecticut. Accordingly he despatched Lieutenant McMullen by a circuitous route back to Crown Point, with a request to Amherst that provisions should be sent up the Connecticut to meet him on the way down. Then he set his course for the Indian town, and for nine days more toiled through the forest with desperate energy. Much of the way was through dense spruce swamps, with no dry resting-place at night. At length the party reached the River St. Francis, fifteen miles above the town, and, hooking their arms together for mutual support, forded it with extreme difficulty. Towards evening, Rogers climbed a tree, and descried the town three miles distant. Accidents, fatigue, and illness had reduced his followers to a hundred and forty-two officers and men. He left them to rest for a time, and, taking with him Lieutenant Turner and Ensign Avery, went to reconnoitre the place; left his two companions, entered it disguised in an Indian dress, and saw the unconscious savages yelling and singing in the full enjoyment of a grand dance. At two o'clock in the morning he rejoined his party, and at three led them to the attack, formed them in a semicircle, and burst in upon the town half an hour before sunrise. Many of the warriors were absent, and the rest were asleep. Some were killed in their beds, and some shot down in trying to escape. "About seven o'clock in the morning," he says, "the affair was completely over, in which time we had killed at least two hundred Indians and taken twenty of their women and children prisoners, fifteen of whom I let go their own way, and five I brought with me, namely, two Indian boys and three Indian girls. I likewise retook five English captives."

English scalps in hundreds were dangling from poles over the doors of the houses.¹ The town was pillaged and burned, not excepting the church, where ornaments of some value were found. On the side of the rangers, Captain Ogden and six men were wounded, and a Mohegan Indian from Stockbridge was killed. Rogers was told by his prisoners that a party of three hundred French and Indians was encamped on the river below, and that another party of two hundred and fifteen was not far distant. They had been sent to cut off the retreat of the invaders, but were doubtful as to their designs till after the blow was struck. There was no time to lose. The rangers made all haste southward, up the St. Francis, subsisting on corn from the Indian town; till, near the eastern borders of Lake Memphremagog, the supply failed, and they separated into small parties, the better to sustain life by hunting. The enemy followed close, attacked Ensign Avery's party, and captured five of them; then fell upon a band of about twenty, under Lieutenants Dunbar and Turner, and killed or captured nearly all. The other bands eluded their pursuers, turned southeastward, reached the Connecticut, some here, some there, and, giddy with fatigue and hunger, toiled wearily down the wild and lonely stream to the appointed rendezvous at the mouth of the Amonoosuc.

¹ Rogers says "about six hundred." Other accounts say six or seven hundred. The late Abbé Maurault, missionary of the St. Francis Indians, and their historian, adopts the latter statement, though it is probably exaggerated.

This was the place to which Rogers had requested that provisions might be sent; and the hope of finding them there had been the breath of life to the famished wayfarers. To their horror, the place was a solitude. There were fires still burning, but those who made them were gone. Amherst had sent Lieutenant Stephen up the river from Charlestown with an abundant supply of food; but finding nobody at the Amoonosuc, he had waited there two days, and then returned, carrying the provisions back with him; for which outrageous conduct he was expelled from the service. "It is hardly possible," says Rogers, "to describe our grief and consternation." Some gave themselves up to despair. Few but their indomitable chief had strength to go farther. There was scarcely any game, and the barren wilderness yielded no sustenance but a few lily bulbs and the tubers of the climbing plant called in New England the ground-nut. Leaving his party to these miserable resources, and promising to send them relief within ten days, Rogers made a raft of dry pine logs, and drifted on it down the stream, with Captain Ogden, a ranger, and one of the captive Indian boys. They were stopped on the second day by rapids, and gained the shore with difficulty. At the foot of the rapids, while Ogden and the ranger went in search of squirrels, Rogers set himself to making another raft; and, having no strength to use the axe, he burned down the trees, which he then divided into logs by the same process. Five days after leaving his party he reached the first English settlement, Charlestown, or "Number Four," and immediately sent a canoe with provisions to the relief of the sufferers, following himself with other canoes two days later. Most of the men were saved, though some died miserably of famine and exhaustion. Of the few who had been captured, we are told by a French contemporary that they "became victims of the fury of the Indian women," from whose clutches the Canadians tried in vain to save them.¹

NOTE. — On the day after he reached "Number Four," Rogers wrote a report of his expedition to Amherst. This letter is printed in his Journals, in which he gives also a supplementary account, containing further particulars. The New Hampshire Gazette, Boston Evening Post, and other newspapers of the time recount the story in detail. Hoyt (Indian Wars, 302) repeats it, with a few additions drawn from the recollections of survivors, long after. There is another account, very short and unsatisfactory, by Thompson Maxwell, who says that he was of the party, which is doubtful. Mante (223) gives horrible details of the sufferings of the rangers. An old chief of the St. Francis Indians, said to be one of those who pursued Rogers after the town was burned, many years ago told Mr. Jesse Pennoyer, a government land surveyor, that Rogers laid an ambush for the pursuers, and defeated them with great loss. This, the story says, took place near the present town of Sherbrooke; and minute details are given, with high praise of the skill and conduct of the famous partisan. If such an incident really took place, it is scarcely possible that Rogers would not have made some mention of it. On the other hand, it is equally incredible that the Indians would have invented the tale of their own defeat. I am indebted for Pennoyer's puzzling narrative to the kindness of R. A. Ramsay, Esq., of Montreal. It was printed, in 1869, in the History of the Eastern Townships, by Mrs. C. M. Day. All things considered, it is probably groundless.

Vaudreuil describes the destruction of the village in a letter to the Minister dated October 26, and says that Rogers had a hundred and fifty men; that St. Francis was burned to ashes; that the head chief and others were killed; that he (Vaudreuil), hearing of the march of the rangers, sent the most active of the Canadians to oppose them, and that Longueuil sent all the Canadians and Indians he could muster to pursue them on their retreat; that forty-six rangers were killed, and ten captured; that he thinks all the rest will starve to death; and, finally, that the affair is very unfortunate.

I once, when a college student, followed on foot the route of Rogers from Lake Memphremagog to the Connecticut.

¹ Événements de la Guerre en Canada, 1759, 1760. Compare N. Y. Col. Docs., X. 1042.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1759.

THE HEIGHTS OF ABRAHAM.

ELATION OF THE FRENCH. — DESPONDENCY OF WOLFE. — THE PARISHES LAID WASTE. — OPERATIONS ABOVE QUEBEC. — ILLNESS OF WOLFE. — A NEW PLAN OF ATTACK. — FAINT HOPE OF SUCCESS. — WOLFE'S LAST DESPATCH. — CONFIDENCE OF VAUDREUIL. — LAST LETTERS OF MONTCALM. — FRENCH VIGILANCE. — BRITISH SQUADRON AT CAP-ROUGE. — LAST ORDERS OF WOLFE. — EMBARKATION. — DESCENT OF THE ST. LAWRENCE. — THE HEIGHTS SCALED. — THE BRITISH LINE. — LAST NIGHT OF MONTCALM. — THE ALARM. — MARCH OF FRENCH TROOPS. — THE BATTLE. — THE ROUT. — THE PURSUIT. — FALL OF WOLFE AND OF MONTCALM.

WOLFE was deeply moved by the disaster at the heights of Montmorenci, and in a General Order on the next day he rebuked the grenadiers for their precipitation. "Such impetuous, irregular, and unsoldierlike proceedings destroy all order, make it impossible for the commanders to form any disposition for an attack, and put it out of the general's power to execute his plans. The grenadiers could not suppose that they could beat the French alone."

The French were elated by their success. "Everybody," says the commissary Berniers, "thought that the campaign was as good as ended, gloriously for us." They had been sufficiently confident even before their victory; and the bearer of a flag of truce told the English officers that he had never imagined they were such fools as to attack Quebec with so small a force. Wolfe, on the other hand, had every reason to despond. At the outset, before he had seen Quebec and learned the nature of the ground, he had meant to begin the campaign by taking post on the Plains of Abraham, and thence laying siege to the town ; but he soon discovered that the Plains of Abraham were hardly more within his reach than was Quebec itself. Such hope as was left him lay in the composition of Montcalm's army. He respected the French commander, and thought his disciplined soldiers not unworthy of the British steel ; but he held his militia in high scorn, and could he but face them in the open field, he never doubted the result. But Montcalm also distrusted them, and persisted in refusing the coveted battle.

Wolfe, therefore, was forced to the conviction that his chances were of the smallest. It is said that, despairing of any decisive stroke, he conceived the idea of fortifying Isle-aux-Coudres, and leaving a part of his troops there when he sailed for home, against another attempt in the spring. The more to weaken the enemy and prepare his future conquest, he began at the same time a course of action which for his credit one would gladly wipe from the record ; for, though far from inhuman, he threw himself with extraordinary intensity into whatever work he had in hand, and, to accomplish it, spared others scarcely more than he spared himself. About the middle of August he issued a third proclamation to the Canadians, declaring that as they had refused his offers of protection and "had made such ungrateful returns in practising the most unchristian barbarities against his troops on all occasions, he could no longer refrain in justice to himself and his army from chastising them as they deserved." The barbarities in question consisted in the frequent scalping and mutilating of sentinels and men on outpost duty, perpetrated no less by Canadians than by Indians. Wolfe's object was twofold : first, to cause the militia to desert, and, secondly, to exhaust the colony. Rangers, light infantry, and Highlanders were sent to waste the settlements far and wide. Wherever resistance was offered, farmhouses and villages were laid in ashes, though churches were generally spared. St. Paul, far below Quebec, was sacked and burned, and the settlements of the opposite shore were partially destroyed. The parishes of L'Ange Gardien, Château Richer, and St. Joachim were wasted with fire and sword. Night after night the garrison of Quebec could see the light of burning houses as far down as the mountain of Cape Tourmente. Near St. Joachim there was a severe skirmish, followed by atrocious cruelties. Captain Alexander Montgomery, of the forty-third regiment, who commanded the detachment, and who has been most unjustly confounded with the revolutionary general, Richard Montgomery, ordered the prisoners to be shot in cold blood, to the indignation of his own officers.¹ Robineau de Portneuf, curé of St. Joachim, placed himself at the head of thirty parishioners and took possession of a large stone house in the adjacent parish of Château Richer, where for a time he held the English at bay. At length he and his followers were drawn out into an ambush, where they were surrounded and killed; and, being disguised as Indians, the rangers scalped them all.²

Most of the French writers of the time mention these barbarities without much comment, while Vaudreuil loudly denounces them. Yet he himself was answerable for atrocities incomparably worse, and on a far larger scale. He had turned loose his savages, red and white, along a frontier of six hundred miles, to waste, burn, and murder at will. "Women and children," such were the orders of Wolfe, "are to be treated with humanity; if any violence is offered to a woman, the offender shall be punished with death." These orders were generally obeyed. The English, with the single exception of Montgomery, killed none but armed men in the act of resistance or attack; Vaudreuil's war-parties spared neither age nor sex.

Montcalm let the parishes burn, and still lay fast intrenched in his lines of Beauport. He would not imperil all Canada to save a few hundred farm-houses; and Wolfe was as far as ever from the battle that he coveted. Hitherto, his attacks had been made chiefly below the town; but, these having failed, he now changed his plan and renewed on a larger scale the movements begun above it in July. With every fair wind, ships and transports passed the batteries of Quebec, favored by a hot fire from Point Levi, and generally succeeded, with more or less damage, in gaining the upper river. A fleet of flatboats was also sent thither, and twelve hundred troops marched overland to embark in them, under Brigadier Murray. Admiral Holmes took command of the little fleet now gathered above the town, and operations in that quarter were systematically resumed.

¹ Fraser Journal. Fraser was an officer under Montgomery, of whom he speaks with anger and disgust.

² Knox, II. 32. Most of the contemporary journals mention the incident.

To oppose them, Bougainville was sent from the camp at Beauport with fifteen hundred men. His was a most arduous and exhausting duty. He must watch the shores for fifteen or twenty miles, divide his force into detachments, and subject himself and his followers to the strain of incessant vigilance and incessant marching. Murray made a descent at Pointe-aux-Trembles, and was repulsed with loss. He tried a second time at another place, was met before landing by a body of ambushed Canadians, and was again driven back, his foremost boats full of dead and wounded. A third time he succeeded, landed at Deschambault, and burned a large building filled with stores and all the spare baggage of the French regular officers. The blow was so alarming that Montcalm hastened from Beauport to take command in person; but when he arrived the English were gone.

Vaudreuil now saw his mistake in sending the French frigates up the river out of harm's way, and withdrawing their crews to serve the batteries of Quebec. Had these ships been there, they might have overpowered those of the English in detail as they passed the town. An attempt was made to retrieve the blunder. The sailors were sent to man the frigates anew and attack the squadron of Holmes. It was too late. Holmes was already too strong for them, and they were recalled. Yet the difficulties of the English still seemed insurmountable. Dysentery and fever broke out in their camps, the number of their effective men was greatly reduced, and the advancing season told them that their work must be done quickly, or not done at all.

On the other side, the distress of the French grew greater every day. Their army was on short rations. The operations of the English above the town filled the camp of Beauport with dismay, for troops and Canadians alike dreaded the cutting off of their supplies. These were all drawn from the districts of Three Rivers and Montreal; and, at best, they were in great danger, since when brought down in boats at night they were apt to be intercepted, while the difficulty of bringing them by land was extreme, through the scarcity of cattle and horses. Discipline was relaxed, disorder and pillage were rife, and the Canadians deserted so fast, that towards the end of August two hundred of them, it is said, would sometimes go off in one night. Early in the month the disheartening news came of the loss of Ticonderoga and Crown Point, the retreat of Bourlamaque, the fall of Niagara, and the expected advance of Amherst on Montreal. It was then that Lévis was despatched to the scene of danger; and Quebec was deplorably weakened by his absence. About this time the Lower Town was again set on fire by the English batteries, and a hundred and sixty-seven houses were burned in a night. In the front of the Upper Town nearly every building was a ruin. At the General Hospital, which was remote enough to be safe from the bombardment, every barn, shed, and garret, and even the chapel itself, were crowded with sick and wounded, with women and children from the town, and the nuns of the Ursulines and the Hôtel-Dieu, driven thither for refuge. Bishop Pontbriand, though suffering from a mortal disease, came almost daily to visit and console them from his lodging in the house of the curé at Charlesbourg.

Towards the end of August the sky brightened again. It became known that Amherst was not moving on Montreal, and Bourlamaque wrote that his position at Isle-aux-Noix was impregnable. On the twenty-seventh a deserter from Wolfe's army brought the welcome assurance that the invaders despaired of success, and would soon sail for home; while there were movements in the English camps and fleet that seemed to confirm what he said. Vaudreuil breathed more freely, and renewed hope and confidence visited the army of Beauport.

Meanwhile a deep cloud fell on the English. Since the siege began, Wolfe had passed with ceaseless energy from camp to camp, animating the troops, observing everything, and directing everything; but now the pale face and tall lean form were seen no more, and the rumor spread that the General was dangerously ill. He had in fact been seized by an access of the disease that had tortured him for some time past; and fever had followed. His quarters were at a French farmhouse in the camp at Montmorenci; and here, as he lay in an upper chamber, helpless in bed, his singular and most unmilitary features haggard with disease and drawn with pain, no man could less have looked the hero. But as the needle, though quivering, points always to the pole, so, through torment and languor and the heats of fever, the mind of Wolfe dwelt on the capture of Quebec. His illness, which began before the twentieth of August, had so far subsided on the twenty-fifth that Knox wrote in his Diary of that day: "His Excellency General Wolfe is on the recovery, to the inconceivable joy of the whole army." On the twenty-ninth he was able to write or dictate a letter to the three brigadiers, Monckton, Townshend, and Murray: "That the public service may not suffer by the General's indisposition, he begs the brigadiers will meet and consult together for the public utility and advantage, and consider of the best method to attack the enemy." The letter then proposes three plans, all bold to audacity. The first was to send a part of the army to ford the Montmorenci eight or nine miles above its mouth, march through the forest, and fall on the rear of the French at Beauport, while the rest landed and attacked them in front. The second was to cross the ford at the mouth of the Montmorenci and march along the strand, under the French intrenchments, till a place could be found where the troops might climb the heights. The third was to make a general attack from boats at the Beauport flats. Wolfe had before entertained two other plans, one of which was to scale the heights at St. Michel, about a league above Quebec; but this he had abandoned on learning that the French were there in force to receive him. The other was to storm the Lower Town; but this also he had abandoned, because the Upper Town, which commanded it, would still remain inaccessible.

The brigadiers met in consultation, rejected the three plans proposed in the letter, and advised that an attempt should be made to gain a footing on the north shore above the town, place the army between Montcalm and his base of supply, and so force him to fight or surrender. The scheme was similar to that of the heights of St. Michel. It seemed desperate, but so did all the rest; and if by chance it should succeed, the gain was far greater than could follow any success below the town. Wolfe embraced it at once.

Not that he saw much hope in it. He knew that every chance was against him. Disappointment in the past and gloom in the future, the pain and exhaustion of disease, toils, and anxieties "too great," in the words of Burke, "to be supported by a delicate constitution, and a body unequal to the vigorous and enterprising soul that it lodged," threw him at times into deep dejection. By those intimate with him he was heard to say that he would not go back defeated, "to be exposed to the censure and reproach of an ignorant populace." In other moods he felt that he ought not to sacrifice what was left of his diminished army in vain conflict with hopeless obstacles. But his final resolve once taken, he would not swerve from it. His fear was that he might not be able to lead his troops in person. "I know perfectly well you cannot cure me," he said to his physician; "but pray make me up so that I may be without pain for a few days, and able to do my duty: that is all I want."

In a despatch which Wolfe had written to Pitt, Admiral Saunders conceived that he had ascribed to the fleet more than its just share in the disaster at Montmorenci; and he sent him a letter on the subject. Major Barré kept it from the invalid till the fever had abated. Wolfe then wrote a long answer, which reveals his mixed dejection and resolve. He affirms the justice of what Saunders had said, but adds: "I shall leave out that part of my letter to Mr. Pitt which you object to. I am sensible of my own errors in the course of the campaign, see clearly wherein I have been deficient, and think a little more or less blame to a man that must necessarily be ruined, of little or no consequence. I take the blame of that unlucky day entirely upon my own shoulders, and I expect to suffer for it." Then, speaking of the new project of an attack above Quebec, he says despondingly: "My ill state of health prevents me from executing my own plan; it is of too desperate a nature to order others to execute." He proceeds, however, to give directions for it. "It will be necessary to run as many small craft as possible above the town, with provisions for six weeks, for about five thousand, which is all I intend to take. My letters, I hope, will be ready to-morrow, and I hope I shall have strength to lead these men to wherever we can find the enemy."

On the next day, the last of August, he was able for the first time to leave the house. It was on this same day that he wrote his last letter to his mother: "My writing to you will convince you that no personal evils worse than defeats and disappointments have fallen upon me. The enemy puts nothing to risk, and I can't in conscience put the whole army to risk. My antagonist has wisely shut himself up in inaccessible intrenchments, so that I can't get at him without spilling a torrent of blood, and that perhaps to little purpose. The Marquis de Montcalm is at the head of a great number of bad soldiers, and I am at the head of a small number of good ones, that wish for nothing so much as to fight him; but the wary old fellow avoids an action, doubtful of the behavior of his army. People must be of the profession to understand the disadvantages and difficulties we labor under, arising from the uncommon natural strength of the country.”

On the second of September a vessel was sent to England with his last despatch to Pitt. It begins thus : “ The obstacles we have met with in the operations of the campaign are much greater than we had reason to expect or could foresee ; not so much from the number of the enemy (though superior to us) as from the natural strength of the country, which the Marquis of Montcalm seems wisely to depend upon. When I learned that succors of all kinds had been thrown into Quebec ; that five battalions of regular troops, completed from the best inhabitants of the country, some of the troops of the colony, and every Canadian that was able to bear arms, besides several nations of savages, had taken the field in a very advantageous situation, — I could not flatter myself that I should be able to reduce the place. I sought, however, an occasion to attack their army, knowing well that with these troops I was able to fight, and hoping that a victory might disperse them.” Then, after recounting the events of the campaign with admirable clearness, he continues : “ I found myself so ill, and am still so weak, that I begged the general officers to consult together for the general utility. They are all of opinion that, as more ships and provisions are now got above the town, they should try, by conveying up a corps of four or five thousand men (which is nearly the whole strength of the army after the Points of Levi and Orleans are left in a proper state of defence), to draw the enemy from their present situation and bring them to an action. I have acquiesced in the proposal, and we are preparing to put it into execution." The letter ends thus : "By the list of disabled officers, many of whom are of rank, you may perceive that the army is much weakened. By the nature of the river, the most formidable part of this armament is deprived of the power of acting ; yet we have almost the whole force of Canada to oppose. In this situation there is such a choice of difficulties that I own myself at a loss how to determine. The affairs of Great Britain, I know, require the most vigorous measures ; but the courage of a handful of brave troops should be exerted only when there is some hope of a favorable event ; however, you may be assured that the small part of the campaign which remains shall be employed, as far as I am able, for the honor of His Majesty and the interest of the nation, in which I am sure of being well seconded by the Admiral and by the generals ; happy if our efforts here can contribute to the success of His Majesty's arms in any other parts of America."

Some days later, he wrote to the Earl of Holderness : "The Marquis of Montcalm has a numerous body of armed men (I cannot call it an army), and the strongest country perhaps in the world. Our fleet blocks up the river above and below the town, but can give no manner of aid in an attack upon the Canadian army. We are now here [off Cap-Rouge] with about thirty-six hundred men, waiting to attack them when and wherever they can best be got at. I am so far recovered as to do business; but my constitution is entirely ruined, without the consolation of doing any considerable service to the state, and without any prospect of it." He had just learned, through the letter brought from Amherst by Ensign Hutchins, that he could expect no help from that quarter.

Perhaps he was as near despair as his undaunted nature was capable of being. In his present state of body and mind he was a hero without the light and cheer of heroism. He flattered himself with no illusions, but saw the worst and faced it all. He seems to have been entirely without excitement. The languor of disease, the desperation of the chances, and the greatness of the stake may have wrought to tranquillize him. His energy was doubly tasked: to bear up his own sinking frame, and to achieve an almost hopeless feat of arms.

Audacious as it was, his plan cannot be called rash if we may accept the statement of two well-informed writers on the French side. They say that on the tenth of September the English naval commanders held a council on board the flagship, in which it was resolved that the lateness of the season required the fleet to leave Quebec without delay. They say further that Wolfe then went to the Admiral, told him that he had found a place where the heights could be scaled, that he would send up a hundred and fifty picked men to feel the way, and that if they gained a lodgment at the top, the other troops should follow; if, on the other hand, the French were there in force to oppose them, he would not sacrifice the army in a hopeless attempt, but embark them for home, consoled by the thought that all had been done that man could do. On this, concludes the story, the Admiral and his officers consented to wait the result.¹

As Wolfe had informed Pitt, his army was greatly weakened. Since the end of June his loss in killed and wounded was more than eight hundred and fifty, including two colonels, two majors, nineteen captains, and thirty-four subalterns; and to these were to be added a greater number disabled by disease.

The squadron of Admiral Holmes above Quebec had now increased to twenty-two vessels, great and small. One of the last that went up was a diminutive schooner, armed with a few swivels, and jocosely named the "Terror of France." She sailed by the town in broad daylight, the French, incensed at her impudence, blazing at her from all their batteries; but she passed unharmed, anchored by the Admiral's ship, and saluted him triumphantly with her swivels.

Wolfe's first move towards executing his plan was the critical one of evacuating the camp at Montmorenci. This was accomplished on the third of September. Montcalm sent a strong force to fall on the rear of the retiring English. Monckton saw the movement from Point Levi, embarked two battalions in the boats of the fleet, and made a feint of landing at Beauport. Montcalm recalled his troops to repulse the threatened attack; and the English withdrew from Montmorenci unmolested, some to the Point of Orleans, others to Point Levi. On the night of the fourth a fleet of flat-boats passed above the town with the baggage and stores. On the fifth, Murray, with four battalions, marched up to the River Etechemin, and forded it under a hot fire from the French batteries at Sillery. Monckton and Townshend followed with three more battalions, and the united force, of about thirty-six hundred men, was embarked on board the ships of Holmes, where Wolfe joined them on the same evening.

¹ This statement is made by the Chevalier Johnstone, and, with some variation, by the author of the valuable Journal tenu à l'Armée que commandoit feu M. le Marquis de Montcalm. Bigot says that, after the battle, he was told by British officers that Wolfe meant to risk only an advance party of two hundred men, and to reembark if they were repulsed.

These movements of the English filled the French commanders with mingled perplexity, anxiety, and hope. A deserter told them that Admiral Saunders was impatient to be gone. Vaudreuil grew confident. "The breaking up of the camp at Montmorenci," he says, "and the abandonment of the intrenchments there, the reembarkation on board the vessels above Quebec of the troops who had encamped on the south bank, the movements of these vessels, the removal of the heaviest pieces of artillery from the batteries of Point Levi,—these and the lateness of the season all combined to announce the speedy departure of the fleet, several vessels of which had even sailed down the river already. The prisoners and the deserters who daily came in told us that this was the common report in their army.”¹ He wrote to Bourlamaque on the first of September: “Everything proves that the grand design of the English has failed.”

Yet he was ceaselessly watchful. So was Montcalm; and he, too, on the night of the second, snatched a moment to write to Bourlamaque from his headquarters in the stone house, by the river of Beauport: “The night is dark; it rains; our troops are in their tents, with clothes on, ready for an alarm; I in my boots; my horses saddled. In fact, this is my usual way. I wish you were here; for I cannot be everywhere, though I multiply myself, and have not taken off my clothes since the twenty-third of June.” On the eleventh of September he wrote his last letter to Bourlamaque, and probably the last that his pen ever traced. “I am overwhelmed with work, and should often lose temper, like you, if I did not remember that I am paid by Europe for not losing it. Nothing new since my last. I give the enemy another month, or something less, to stay here.” The more sanguine Vaudreuil would hardly give them a week.

Meanwhile, no precaution was spared. The force under Bougainville above Quebec was raised to three thousand men.² He was ordered to watch the shore as far as Jacques-Cartier, and follow with his main body every movement of Holmes’s squadron. There was little fear for the heights near the town; they were thought inaccessible.¹ Even Montcalm believed them safe, and had expressed himself to that effect some time before. "We need not suppose," he wrote to Vaudreuil, "that the enemy have wings;" and again, speaking of the very place where Wolfe afterwards landed, "I swear to you that a hundred men posted there would stop their whole army."² He was right. A hundred watchful and determined men could have held the position long enough for reinforcements to come up.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Oct. 1759.

² Journal du Siège (Bibliothèque de Hartwell). Journal tenu à l'Armée, etc. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Oct. 1759.

The hundred men were there. Captain de Vergor, of the colony troops, commanded them, and reinforcements were within his call; for the battalion of Guienne had been ordered to encamp close at hand on the Plains of Abraham.³ Vergor's post, called Anse du Foulon, was a mile and a half from Quebec. A little beyond it, by the brink of the cliffs, was another post, called Samos, held by seventy men with four cannon; and, beyond this again, the heights of Sillery were guarded by a hundred and thirty men, also with cannon.⁴ These were outposts of Bougainville, whose headquarters were at Cap-Rouge, six miles above Sillery, and whose troops were in continual movement along the intervening shore. Thus all was vigilance; for while the French were strong in the hope of speedy delivery, they felt that there was no safety

¹ Pontbriand, Jugement impartial.

² Montcalm à Vaudreuil, 27 Juillet. Ibid., 29 Juillet, 1759.

³ Foligny, Journal mémoratif. Journal tenu à l'Armée, etc.

⁴ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Oct. 1759.

till the tents of the invader had vanished from their shores and his ships from their river. "What we knew," says one of them, "of the character of M. Wolfe, that impetuous, bold, and intrepid warrior, prepared us for a last attack before he left us."

Wolfe had been very ill on the evening of the fourth. The troops knew it, and their spirits sank; but, after a night of torment, he grew better, and was soon among them again, rekindling their ardor, and imparting a cheer that he could not share. For himself he had no pity; but when he heard of the illness of two officers in one of the ships, he sent them a message of warm sympathy, advised them to return to Point Levi, and offered them his own barge and an escort. They thanked him, but replied that, come what might, they would see the enterprise to an end. Another officer remarked in his hearing that one of the invalids had a very delicate constitution. "Don't tell me of constitution," said Wolfe; "he has good spirit, and good spirit will carry a man through everything."¹ An immense moral force bore up his own frail body and forced it to its work.

Major Robert Stobo, who, five years before, had been given as a hostage to the French at the capture of Fort Necessity, arrived about this time in a vessel from Halifax. He had long been a prisoner at Quebec, not always in close custody, and had used his opportunities to acquaint himself with the neighborhood. In the spring of this year he and an officer of rangers named Stevens had made their escape with extraordinary skill and daring; and he now returned to give his countrymen the benefit of his local knowledge.¹ His biographer says that it was he who directed Wolfe in the choice of a landing-place.² Be this as it may, Wolfe in person examined the river and the shores as far as Pointe-aux-Trembles; till at length, landing on the south side a little above Quebec, and looking across the water with a telescope, he descried a path that ran with a long slope up the face of the woody precipice, and saw at the top a cluster of tents. They were those of Vergor's guard at the Anse du Foulon, now called Wolfe's Cove. As he could see but ten or twelve of them, he thought that the guard could not be numerous, and might be overpowered. His hope would have been stronger if he had known that Vergor had once been tried for misconduct and cowardice in the surrender of Beauséjour, and saved from merited disgrace by the friendship of Bigot and the protection of Vaudreuil.³

¹ KNOX, II. 61, 65.

The morning of the seventh was fair and warm, and the vessels of Holmes, their crowded decks gay with scarlet uniforms, sailed up the river to Cap-Rouge. A lively scene awaited them; for here were the headquarters of Bougainville, and here lay his principal force, while the rest watched the banks above and below. The cove into which the little river runs was guarded by floating batteries; the surrounding shore was defended by breast-works; and a large body of regulars, militia, and mounted Canadians in blue uniforms moved to and fro, with restless activity, on the hills behind. When the vessels came to anchor, the horsemen dismounted and formed in line with the infantry; then, with loud shouts, the whole rushed down the heights to man their works at the shore. That true Briton, Captain Knox, looked on with a critical eye from the gangway of his ship, and wrote that night in his Diary that they had made a ridiculous noise. "How different!" he exclaims, "how nobly awful and expressive of true valor is the customary silence of the British troops!"

¹ Letters in Boston Post Boy, No. 97, and Boston Evening Post, No. 1,258.

² Memoirs of Major Robert Stobo. Curious, but often inexact.

³ See supra, Vol. I. p. 253.

In the afternoon the ships opened fire, while the troops entered the boats and rowed up and down as if looking for a landing-place. It was but a feint of Wolfe to deceive Bougainville as to his real design. A heavy easterly rain set in on the next morning, and lasted two days without respite. All operations were suspended, and the men suffered greatly in the crowded transports. Half of them were therefore landed on the south shore, where they made their quarters in the village of St. Nicolas, refreshed themselves, and dried their wet clothing, knapsacks, and blankets.

For several successive days the squadron of Holmes was allowed to drift up the river with the flood tide and down with the ebb, thus passing and repassing incessantly between the neighborhood of Quebec on one hand, and a point high above Cap-Rouge on the other ; while Bougainville, perplexed, and always expecting an attack, followed the ships to and fro along the shore, by day and by night, till his men were exhausted with ceaseless forced marches.¹

At last the time for action came. On Wednesday, the twelfth, the troops at St. Nicolas were embarked again, and all were told to hold themselves in readiness. Wolfe, from the flagship "Sutherland," issued his last general orders. "The enemy's force is now divided, great scarcity of provisions in their camp, and universal discontent among the Canadians. Our troops below are in readiness to join us ; all the light artillery and tools are embarked at the Point of Levi ; and the troops will land where the French seem least to expect it. The first body that gets on shore is to march directly to the enemy and drive them from any little post they may occupy ; the officers must be careful that the succeeding bodies do not by any mistake fire on those who go before them. The battalions must form on the upper ground with expedition, and be ready to charge whatever presents itself. When the artillery and troops are landed, a corps will be left to secure the landing-place, while the rest march on and endeavor to bring the Canadians and French to a battle. The officers and men will remember what their country expects from them, and what a determined body of soldiers inured to war is capable of doing against five weak French battalions mingled with a disorderly peasantry."

¹ Joannès, Major de Québec, Mémoire sur la Campagne de 1759.

The spirit of the army answered to that of its chief. The troops loved and admired their general, trusted their officers, and were ready for any attempt. "Nay, how could it be otherwise," quaintly asks honest Sergeant John Johnson, of the fifty-eighth regiment, "being at the heels of gentlemen whose whole thirst, equal with their general, was for glory? We had seen them tried, and always found them sterling. We knew that they would stand by us to the last extremity."

Wolfe had thirty-six hundred men and officers with him on board the vessels of Holmes; and he now sent orders to Colonel Burton at Point Levi to bring to his aid all who could be spared from that place and the Point of Orleans. They were to march along the south bank, after nightfall, and wait further orders at a designated spot convenient for embarkation. Their number was about twelve hundred, so that the entire force destined for the enterprise was at the utmost forty-eight hundred.¹ With these, Wolfe meant to climb the heights of Abraham in the teeth of an enemy who, though much reduced, were still twice as numerous as their assailants.²

¹ See Note, end of chapter.

² Including Bougainville's command. An escaped prisoner told Wolfe, a few days before, that Montcalm still had fourteen thousand men. Journal of an Expedition on the River St. Lawrence. This meant only those in the town and the camps of Beauport. "I don't believe their whole army amounts to that number," wrote Wolfe to Colonel Burton, on the tenth. He knew, however, that if Montcalm could bring all his troops together, the French would outnumber him more than two to one.

Admiral Saunders lay with the main fleet in the Basin of Quebec. This excellent officer, whatever may have been his views as to the necessity of a speedy departure, aided Wolfe to the last with unfailing energy and zeal. It was agreed between them that while the General made the real attack, the Admiral should engage Montcalm's attention by a pretended one. As night approached, the fleet ranged itself along the Beauport shore; the boats were lowered and filled with sailors, marines, and the few troops that had been left behind; while ship signalled to ship, cannon flashed and thundered, and shot ploughed the beach, as if to clear a way for assailants to land. In the gloom of the evening the effect was imposing. Montcalm, who thought that the movements of the English above the town were only a feint, that their main force was still below it, and that their real attack would be made there, was completely deceived, and massed his troops in front of Beauport to repel the expected landing. But while in the fleet of Saunders all was uproar and ostentatious menace, the danger was ten miles away, where the squadron of Holmes lay tranquil and silent at its anchorage off Cap-Rouge.

It was less tranquil than it seemed. All on board knew that a blow would be struck that night, though only a few high officers knew where. Colonel Howe, of the light infantry, called for volunteers to lead the unknown and desperate venture, promising, in the words of one of them, "that if any of us survived we might depend on being recommended to the General.”¹ As many as were wanted — twenty-four in all — soon came forward. Thirty large bateaux and some boats belonging to the squadron lay moored alongside the vessels; and late in the evening the troops were ordered into them, the twenty-four volunteers taking their place in the foremost. They held in all about seventeen hundred men. The rest remained on board.

Bougainville could discern the movement, and misjudged it, thinking that he himself was to be attacked. The tide was still flowing; and, the better to deceive him, the vessels and boats were allowed to drift upward with it for a little distance, as if to land above Cap-Rouge.

The day had been fortunate for Wolfe. Two deserters came from the camp of Bougainville with intelligence that, at ebb tide on the next night, he was to send down a convoy of provisions to Montcalm. The necessities of the camp at Beauport, and the difficulties of transportation by land, had before compelled the French to resort to this perilous means of conveying supplies; and their boats, drifting in darkness under the shadows of the northern shore, had commonly passed in safety. Wolfe saw at once that, if his own boats went down in advance of the convoy, he could turn the intelligence of the deserters to good account.

¹ Journal of the Particular Transactions during the Siege of Quebec. The writer, a soldier in the light infantry, says he was one of the first eight who came forward. See Notes and Queries, XX. 370.

He was still on board the "Sutherland." Every preparation was made, and every order given; it only remained to wait the turning of the tide. Seated with him in the cabin was the commander of the sloop-of-war "Porcupine," his former school-fellow, John Jervis, afterwards Earl St. Vincent. Wolfe told him that he expected to die in the battle of the next day; and taking from his bosom a miniature of Miss Lowther, his betrothed, he gave it to him with a request that he would return it to her if the presentiment should prove true.¹

Towards two o'clock the tide began to ebb, and a fresh wind blew down the river. Two lanterns were raised into the maintop shrouds of the "Sutherland." It was the appointed signal; the boats cast off and fell down with the current, those of the light infantry leading the way. The vessels with the rest of the troops had orders to follow a little later.

To look for a moment at the chances on which this bold adventure hung. First, the deserters told Wolfe that provision-boats were ordered to go down to Quebec that night; secondly, Bougainville countermanded them; thirdly, the sentries posted along the heights were told of the order, but not of the countermand;² fourthly, Vergor at the Anse du Foulon had permitted most of his men, chiefly Canadians from Lorette, to go home for a time and work at their harvesting, on condition, it is said, that they should afterwards work in a neighboring field of his own ;¹ fifthly, he kept careless watch, and went quietly to bed ; sixthly, the battalion of Guienne, ordered to take post on the Plains of Abraham, had, for reasons unexplained, remained encamped by the St. Charles ;² and lastly, when Bougainville saw Holmes's vessels drift down the stream, he did not tax his weary troops to follow them, thinking that they would return as usual with the flood tide.³ But for these conspiring circumstances New France might have lived a little longer, and the fruitless heroism of Wolfe would have passed, with countless other heroisms, into oblivion.

¹ Tucker, Life of Earl St. Vincent, I. 19. (London, 1844.)

² Journal tenu à l'Armée, etc.

For full two hours the procession of boats, borne on the current, steered silently down the St. Lawrence. The stars were visible, but the night was moonless and sufficiently dark. The General was in one of the foremost boats, and near him was a young midshipman, John Robison, afterwards professor of natural philosophy in the University of Edinburgh. He used to tell in his later life how Wolfe, with a low voice, repeated Gray's Elegy in a Country Churchyard to the officers about him. Probably it was to relieve the intense strain of his thoughts. Among the rest was the verse which his own fate was soon to illustrate, —

“The paths of glory lead but to the grave.”

“Gentlemen,” he said, as his recital ended, “I would rather have written those lines than take

¹ Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749–1760.

² Foligny, Journal mémoratif. Journal tenu à l'Armée, etc.

³ Johnstone, Dialogue. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Oct. 1759.

Quebec." None were there to tell him that the hero is greater than the poet.

As they neared their destination, the tide bore them in towards the shore, and the mighty wall of rock and forest towered in darkness on their left. The dead stillness was suddenly broken by the sharp Qui vive! of a French sentry, invisible in the thick gloom. France! answered a Highland officer of Fraser's regiment from one of the boats of the light infantry. He had served in Holland, and spoke French fluently.

À quel régiment?

De la Reine, replied the Highlander. He knew that a part of that corps was with Bougainville. The sentry, expecting the convoy of provisions, was satisfied, and did not ask for the password.

Soon after, the foremost boats were passing the heights of Samos, when another sentry challenged them, and they could see him through the darkness running down to the edge of the water, within range of a pistol-shot. In answer to his questions, the same officer replied, in French: "Provision-boats. Don't make a noise; the English will hear us."¹ In fact, the sloop-of-war "Hunter" was anchored in the stream not far off. This time, again, the sentry let them pass. In a few moments they rounded the headland above the Anse du Foulon. There was no sentry there. The strong current swept the boats of the light infantry a little below the intended landing-place.¹ They disembarked on a narrow strand at the foot of heights as steep as a hill covered with trees can be. The twenty-four volunteers led the way, climbing with what silence they might, closely followed by a much larger body. When they reached the top they saw in the dim light a cluster of tents at a short distance, and immediately made a dash at them. Vergor leaped from bed and tried to run off, but was shot in the heel and captured. His men, taken by surprise, made little resistance. One or two were caught, and the rest fled.

¹ See a note of Smollett, History of England, V. 56 (ed. 1805). Sergeant Johnson, Vaudreuil, Foligny, and the Journal of Particular Transactions give similar accounts.

The main body of troops waited in their boats by the edge of the strand. The heights near by were cleft by a great ravine choked with forest trees; and in its depths ran a little brook called Ruisseau St.-Denis, which, swollen by the late rains, fell plashing in the stillness over a rock. Other than this no sound could reach the strained ear of Wolfe but the gurgle of the tide and the cautious climbing of his advance-parties as they mounted the steeps at some little distance from where he sat listening. At length from the top came a sound of musket-shots, followed by loud huzzas, and he knew that his men were masters of the position. The word was given; the troops leaped from the boats and scaled the heights, some here, some there, clutching at trees and bushes, their muskets slung at their backs. Tradition still points out the place, near the mouth of the ravine, where the foremost reached the top. Wolfe said to an officer near him: "You can try it, but I don't think you'll get up." He himself, however, found strength to drag himself up with the rest. The narrow slanting path on the face of the heights had been made impassable by trenches and abattis; but all obstructions were soon cleared away, and then the ascent was easy. In the gray of the morning the long file of red-coated soldiers moved quickly upward, and formed in order on the plateau above.

¹ Saunders to Pitt, 20 Sept. Journal of Sergeant Johnson. Compare Knox, II. 67.

Before many of them had reached the top, cannon were heard close on the left. It was the battery at Samos firing on the boats in the rear and the vessels descending from Cap-Rouge. A party was sent to silence it; this was soon effected, and the more distant battery at Sillery was next attacked and taken. As fast as the boats were emptied they returned for the troops left on board the vessels and for those waiting on the southern shore under Colonel Burton.

The day broke in clouds and threatening rain. Wolfe's battalions were drawn up along the crest of the heights. No enemy was in sight, though a body of Canadians had sallied from the town and moved along the strand towards the landing-place, whence they were quickly driven back. He had achieved the most critical part of his enterprise; yet the success that he coveted placed him in imminent danger. On one side was the garrison of Quebec and the army of Beauport, and Bougainville was on the other. Wolfe's alternative was victory or ruin ; for if he should be overwhelmed by a combined attack, retreat would be hopeless. His feelings no man can know ; but it would be safe to say that hesitation or doubt had no part in them.

He went to reconnoitre the ground, and soon came to the Plains of Abraham, so called from Abraham Martin, a pilot known as Maître Abraham, who had owned a piece of land here in the early times of the colony. The Plains were a tract of grass, tolerably level in most parts, patched here and there with cornfields, studded with clumps of bushes, and forming a part of the high plateau at the eastern end of which Quebec stood. On the south it was bounded by the declivities along the St. Lawrence ; on the north, by those along the St. Charles, or rather along the meadows through which that lazy stream crawled like a writhing snake. At the place that Wolfe chose for his battle-field the plateau was less than a mile wide.

Thither the troops advanced, marched by files till they reached the ground, and then wheeled to form their line of battle, which stretched across the plateau and faced the city. It consisted of six battalions and the detached grenadiers from Louisbourg, all drawn up in ranks three deep. Its right wing was near the brink of the heights along the St. Lawrence ; but the left could not reach those along the St. Charles. On this side a wide space was perforce left open, and there was danger of being outflanked. To prevent this, Brigadier Townshend was stationed here with two battalions, drawn up at right angles with the rest, and fronting the St. Charles. The battalion of Webb's regiment, under Colonel Burton, formed the reserve; the third battalion of Royal Americans was left to guard the landing; and Howe's light infantry occupied a wood far in the rear. Wolfe, with Monckton and Murray, commanded the front line, on which the heavy fighting was to fall, and which, when all the troops had arrived, numbered less than thirty-five hundred men.¹

Quebec was not a mile distant, but they could not see it; for a ridge of broken ground intervened, called Buttes-à-Neveu, about six hundred paces off. The first division of troops had scarcely come up when, about six o'clock, this ridge was suddenly thronged with white uniforms. It was the battalion of Guienne, arrived at the eleventh hour from its camp by the St. Charles. Some time after there was hot firing in the rear. It came from a detachment of Bougainville's command attacking a house where some of the light infantry were posted. The assailants were repulsed, and the firing ceased. Light showers fell at intervals, besprinkling the troops as they stood patiently waiting the event.

Montcalm had passed a troubled night. Through all the evening the cannon bellowed from the ships of Saunders, and the boats of the fleet hovered in the dusk off the Beauport shore, threatening every moment to land. Troops lined the intrenchments till day, while the General walked the field that adjoined his headquarters till one in the morning, accompanied by the Chevalier Johnstone and Colonel Poulariez. Johnstone says that he was in great agitation, and took no rest all night. At daybreak he heard the sound of cannon above the town. It was the battery at Samos firing on the English ships. He had sent an officer to the quarters of Vaudreuil, which were much nearer Quebec, with orders to bring him word at once should anything unusual happen. But no word came, and about six o'clock he mounted and rode thither with Johnstone. As they advanced, the country behind the town opened more and more upon their sight; till at length, when opposite Vaudreuil's house, they saw across the St. Charles, some two miles away, the red ranks of British soldiers on the heights beyond.

¹ See Note, end of chapter.

"This is a serious business," Montcalm said; and sent off Johnstone at full gallop to bring up the troops from the centre and left of the camp. Those of the right were in motion already, doubtless by the Governor's order. Vaudreuil came out of the house. Montcalm stopped for a few words with him; then set spurs to his horse, and rode over the bridge of the St. Charles to the scene of danger.¹ He rode with a fixed look, uttering not a word.²

The army followed in such order as it might, crossed the bridge in hot haste, passed under the northern rampart of Quebec, entered at the Palace

¹ Johnstone, Dialogue.

² Malartic à Bourlamaque, — Sept. 1759.

Gate, and pressed on in headlong march along the quaint narrow streets of the warlike town: troops of Indians in scalplocks and war-paint, a savage glitter in their deep-set eyes; bands of Canadians whose all was at stake, — faith, country, and home; the colony regulars; the battalions of Old France, a torrent of white uniforms and gleaming bayonets, La Sarre, Languedoc, Roussillon, Béarn, — victors of Oswego, William Henry, and Ticonderoga. So they swept on, poured out upon the plain, some by the gate of St. Louis, and some by that of St. John, and hurried, breathless, to where the banners of Guienne still fluttered on the ridge.

Montcalm was amazed at what he saw. He had expected a detachment, and he found an army. Full in sight before him stretched the lines of Wolfe: the close ranks of the English infantry, a silent wall of red, and the wild array of the Highlanders, with their waving tartans, and bagpipes screaming defiance. Vaudreuil had not come; but not the less was felt the evil of a divided authority and the jealousy of the rival chiefs. Montcalm waited long for the forces he had ordered to join him from the left wing of the army. He waited in vain. It is said that the Governor had detained them, lest the English should attack the Beauport shore. Even if they did so, and succeeded, the French might defy them, could they but put Wolfe to rout on the Plains of Abraham. Neither did the garrison of Quebec come to the aid of Montcalm. He sent to Ramesay, its commander, for twenty-five field-pieces which were on the Palace battery. Ramesay would give him only three, saying that he wanted them for his own defence. There were orders and counter-orders ; misunderstanding, haste, delay, perplexity.

Montcalm and his chief officers held a council of war. It is said that he and they alike were for immediate attack. His enemies declare that he was afraid lest Vaudreuil should arrive and take command ; but the Governor was not a man to assume responsibility at such a crisis. Others say that his impetuosity overcame his better judgment ; and of this charge it is hard to acquit him. Bougainville was but a few miles distant, and some of his troops were much nearer ; a messenger sent by way of Old Lorette could have reached him in an hour and a half at most, and a combined attack in front and rear might have been concerted with him. If, moreover, Montcalm could have come to an understanding with Vaudreuil, his own force might have been strengthened by two or three thousand additional men from the town and the camp of Beauport ; but he felt that there was no time to lose, for he imagined that Wolfe would soon be reinforced, which was impossible, and he believed that the English were fortifying themselves, which was no less an error. He has been blamed not only for fighting too soon, but for fighting at all. In this he could not choose. Fight he must, for Wolfe was now in a position to cut off all his supplies. His men were full of ardor, and he resolved to attack before their ardor cooled. He spoke a few words to them in his keen, vehement way. "I remember very well how he looked," one of the Canadians, then a boy of eighteen, used to say in his old age; "he rode a black or dark bay horse along the front of our lines, brandishing his sword, as if to excite us to do our duty. He wore a coat with wide sleeves, which fell back as he raised his arm, and showed the white linen of the wristband."¹

The English waited the result with a composure which, if not quite real, was at least well feigned. The three field-pieces sent by Ramesay plied them with canister-shot, and fifteen hundred Canadians and Indians fusilladed them in front and flank. Over all the plain, from behind bushes and knolls and the edge of cornfields, puffs of smoke sprang incessantly from the guns of these hidden marksmen. Skirmishers were thrown out before the lines to hold them in check, and the soldiers were ordered to lie on the grass to avoid the shot. The firing was liveliest on the English left, where bands of sharpshooters got under the edge of the declivity, among thickets, and behind scattered houses, whence they killed and wounded a considerable number of Townshend's men. The light infantry were called up from the rear. The houses were taken and retaken, and one or more of them was burned.

Wolfe was everywhere. How cool he was, and why his followers loved him, is shown by an incident that happened in the course of the morning.

¹ Recollections of Joseph Trahan, in Revue Canadienne, IV. 856.

One of his captains was shot through the lungs; and on recovering consciousness he saw the General standing at his side. Wolfe pressed his hand, told him not to despair, praised his services, promised him early promotion, and sent an aide-de-camp to Monckton to beg that officer to keep the promise if he himself should fall.¹

It was towards ten o'clock when, from the high ground on the right of the line, Wolfe saw that the crisis was near. The French on the ridge had formed themselves into three bodies, regulars in the centre, regulars and Canadians on right and left. Two field-pieces, which had been dragged up the heights at Anse du Foulon, fired on them with grape-shot, and the troops, rising from the ground, prepared to receive them. In a few moments more they were in motion. They came on rapidly, uttering loud shouts, and firing as soon as they were within range. Their ranks, ill ordered at the best, were further confused by a number of Canadians who had been mixed among the regulars, and who, after hastily firing, threw themselves on the ground to reload.² The British advanced a few rods; then halted and stood still. When the French were within forty paces the word of command rang out, and a crash of musketry answered all along the line. The volley was delivered with remarkable precision. In the battalions of the centre, which had suffered least from the enemy's bullets, the simultaneous explosion was afterwards said by French officers to have sounded like a cannon-shot. Another volley followed, and then a furious clattering fire that lasted but a minute or two. When the smoke rose, a miserable sight was revealed: the ground cumbered with dead and wounded, the advancing masses stopped short and turned into a frantic mob, shouting, cursing, gesticulating. The order was given to charge. Then over the field rose the British cheer, mixed with the fierce yell of the Highland slogan. Some of the corps pushed forward with the bayonet; some advanced firing. The clansmen drew their broadswords and dashed on, keen and swift as bloodhounds. At the English right, though the attacking column was broken to pieces, a fire was still kept up, chiefly, it seems, by sharpshooters from the bushes and cornfields, where they had lain for an hour or more. Here Wolfe himself led the charge, at the head of the Louisbourg grenadiers. A shot shattered his wrist. He wrapped his handkerchief about it and kept on. Another shot struck him, and he still advanced, when a third lodged in his breast. He staggered, and sat on the ground. Lieutenant Brown, of the grenadiers, one Henderson, a volunteer in the same company, and a private soldier, aided by an officer of artillery who ran to join them, carried him in their arms to the rear. He begged them to lay him down. They did so, and asked if he would have a surgeon. "There's no need," he answered; "it's all over with me." A moment after, one of them cried out: "They run; see how they run!" "Who run?" Wolfe demanded, like a man roused from sleep. "The enemy, sir. Egad, they give way everywhere!" "Go, one of you, to Colonel Burton," returned the dying man; "tell him to march Webb's regiment down to Charles River, to cut off their retreat from the bridge." Then, turning on his side, he murmured, "Now, God be praised, I will die in peace!" and in a few moments his gallant soul had fled.

¹ Sir Denis Le Marchant, cited by Wright, 579. Le Marchant knew the captain in his old age. Monckton kept Wolfe's promise.

² "Les Canadiens, qui étaient mêlés dans les bataillons, se pressèrent de tirer et, dès qu'ils l'eussent fait, de mettre ventre à terre pour charger, ce qui rompit tout l'ordre." Malartic à Bourlamaque, 25 Sept. 1759.

Montcalm, still on horseback, was borne with the tide of fugitives towards the town. As he approached the walls a shot passed through his body. He kept his seat; two soldiers supported him, one on each side, and led his horse through the St. Louis Gate. On the open space within, among the excited crowd, were several women, drawn, no doubt, by eagerness to know the result of the fight. One of them recognized him, saw the streaming blood, and shrieked, "O mon Dieu! mon Dieu! le Marquis est tué!" "It's nothing, it's nothing," replied the death-stricken man; "don't be troubled for me, my good friends." ("Ce n'est rien, ce n'est rien; ne vous affligez pas pour moi, mes bonnes amies.")

NOTE.—There are several contemporary versions of the dying words of Wolfe. The report of Knox, given above, is by far the best attested. Knox says that he took particular pains at the time to learn them accurately from those who were with Wolfe when they were uttered.

The anecdote of Montcalm is due to the late Hon. Malcolm Fraser, of Quebec. He often heard it in his youth from an old woman, who, when a girl, was one of the group who saw the wounded general led by, and to whom the words were addressed.

Force of the English and French at the Battle of Quebec. — The tabular return given by Knox shows the number of officers and men in each corps engaged. According to this, the battalions as they stood on the Plains of Abraham before the battle varied in strength from 322 (Monckton's) to 683 (Webb's), making a total of 4,828, including officers. But another return, less specific, signed George Townshend, Brigadier, makes the entire number only 4,441. Townshend succeeded Wolfe in the command; and this return, which is preserved in the Public Record Office, was sent to London a few days after the battle. Some French writers present put the number lower, perhaps for the reason that Webb's regiment and the third battalion of Royal Americans took no part in the fight, the one being in the rear as a reserve, and the other also invisible, guarding the landing place. Wolfe's front line, which alone met and turned the French attack, was made up as follows, the figures including officers and men: —

Thirty-fifth Regiment . . .	519	Twenty-eighth Regiment . .	421
Fifty-eighth " . . .	335	Forty-seventh " . .	360
Seventy-eighth " . . .	662	Forty-third " . .	327
Louisbourg Grenadiers . .	241	Light Infantry	400
Making a total of 3,265.

The French force engaged cannot be precisely given. Knox, on information received from "an intelligent Frenchman," states the number, corps by corps, the aggregate being 7,520. This, on examination, plainly appears exaggerated. Fraser puts it at 5,000; Townshend at 4,470, including militia. Bigot says, 3,500, which may perhaps be as many as actually advanced to the attack, since some of the militia held back. Including Bougainville's command, the militia and artillerymen left in the Beauport camp, the sailors at the town batteries, and the garrison of Quebec, at least as many of the French were out of the battle as were in it: and the numbers engaged on each side seem to have been about equal.

For authorities of the foregoing chapter, see Appendix I.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1759.

FALL OF QUEBEC.

AFTER THE BATTLE. — CANADIANS RESIST THE PURSUIT. — ARRIVAL OF VAUDREUIL. — SCENE IN THE REDOUBT. — PANIC. — MOVEMENTS OF THE VICTORS. — VAUDREUIL'S COUNCIL OF WAR. — PRECIPITATE RETREAT OF THE FRENCH ARMY. — LAST HOURS OF MONTCALM. — HIS DEATH AND BURIAL. — QUEBEC ABANDONED TO ITS FATE. — DESPAIR OF THE GARRISON. — LÉVIS JOINS THE ARMY. — ATTEMPTS TO RELIEVE THE TOWN. — SURRENDER. — THE BRITISH OCCUPY QUEBEC. — SLANDERS OF VAUDREUIL. — RECEPTION IN ENGLAND OF THE NEWS OF WOLFE'S VICTORY AND DEATH. — PREDICTION OF JONATHAN MAYHEW.

“NEVER was rout more complete than that of our army,” says a French official.¹ It was the more so because Montcalm held no troops in reserve, but launched his whole force at once against the English. Nevertheless there was some resistance to the pursuit. It came chiefly from the Canadians, many of whom had not advanced with the regulars to the attack. Those on the right wing, instead of doing so, threw themselves into an extensive tract of bushes that lay in front of the English left; and from this cover they opened a fire, too distant for much effect, till the victors advanced in their turn, when the shot of the hidden marksmen told severely upon them. Two battalions, therefore, deployed before the bushes, fired volleys into them, and drove their occupants out.

¹ Daine au Ministre, 9 Oct. 1759.

Again, those of the Canadians who, before the main battle began, attacked the English left from the brink of the plateau towards the St. Charles, withdrew when the rout took place, and ran along the edge of the declivity till, at the part of it called Côte Ste.-Geneviève, they came to a place where it was overgrown with thickets. Into these they threw themselves; and were no sooner under cover than they faced about to fire upon the Highlanders, who presently came up. As many of these mountaineers, according to their old custom, threw down their muskets when they charged, and had no weapons but their broadswords, they tried in vain to dislodge the marksmen, and suffered greatly in the attempt. Other troops came to their aid, cleared the thickets, after stout resistance, and drove their occupants across the meadow to the bridge of boats. The conduct of the Canadians at the Côte Ste.-Geneviève went far to atone for the shortcomings of some of them on the battle-field.

A part of the fugitives escaped into the town by the gates of St. Louis and St. John, while the greater number fled along the front of the ramparts, rushed down the declivity to the suburb of St. Roch, and ran over the meadows to the bridge, protected by the cannon of the town and the two armed hulks in the river. The rout had but just begun when Vaudreuil crossed the bridge from the camp of Beauport. It was four hours since he first heard the alarm, and his quarters were not much more than two miles from the battle-field. He does not explain why he did not come sooner; it is certain that his coming was well timed to throw the blame on Montcalm in case of defeat, or to claim some of the honor for himself in case of victory. "Monsieur the Marquis of Montcalm," he says, "unfortunately made his attack before I had joined him."¹ His joining him could have done no good; for though he had at last brought with him the rest of the militia from the Beauport camp, they had come no farther than the bridge over the St. Charles, having, as he alleges, been kept there by an unauthorized order from the chief of staff, Montreuil.² He declares that the regulars were in such a fright that he could not stop them; but that the Canadians listened to his voice, and that it was he who rallied them at the Côte Ste.-Geneviève. Of this the evidence is his own word. From other accounts it would appear that the Canadians rallied themselves. Vaudreuil lost no time in recrossing the bridge and joining the militia in the redoubt at the farther end, where a crowd of fugitives soon poured in after him.

The aide-de-camp Johnstone, mounted on horseback, had stopped for a moment in what is now the suburb of St. John to encourage some soldiers who were trying to save a cannon that had stuck fast in a marshy hollow; when, on spurring his horse to the higher ground, he saw within musket-shot a long line of British troops, who immediately fired upon him. The bullets whistled about his ears, tore his clothes, and wounded his horse; which, however, carried him along the edge of the declivity to a windmill, near which was a roadway to a bakehouse on the meadow below. He descended, crossed the meadow, reached the bridge, and rode over it to the great redoubt or hornwork that guarded its head.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 21 Sept. 1759.

² Ibid., 5 Oct. 1759.

The place was full of troops and Canadians in a wild panic. "It is impossible," says Johnstone, "to imagine the disorder and confusion I found in the hornwork. Consternation was general. M. de Vaudreuil listened to everybody, and was always of the opinion of him who spoke last. On the appearance of the English troops on the plain by the bakehouse, Montguet and La Motte, two old captains in the regiment of Béarn, cried out with vehemence to M. de Vaudreuil 'that the hornwork would be taken in an instant by assault, sword in hand; that we all should be cut to pieces without quarter; and that nothing would save us but an immediate and general capitulation of Canada, giving it up to the English.'"¹ Yet the river was wide and deep, and the hornwork was protected on the water side by strong palisades, with cannon. Nevertheless there rose a general cry to cut the bridge of boats. By doing so more than half the army, who had not yet crossed, would have been sacrificed. The axemen were already at work, when they were stopped by some officers who had not lost their wits.

¹ Confirmed by Journal tenu à l'Armée, etc. "Divers officiers des troupes de terre n'hésitèrent point à dire, tout haut en présence du soldat, qu'il ne nous restoit d'autre ressource que celle de capituler promptement pour toute la colonie," etc.

“M. de Vaudreuil,” pursues Johnstone, “was closeted in a house in the inside of the hornwork with the Intendant and some other persons. I suspected they were busy drafting the articles for a general capitulation, and I entered the house, where I had only time to see the Intendant, with a pen in his hand, writing upon a sheet of paper, when M. de Vaudreuil told me I had no business there. Having answered him that what he had said was true, I retired immediately, in wrath to see them intent on giving up so scandalously a dependency for the preservation of which so much blood and treasure had been expended.” On going out he met Lieutenant-colonels Dalquier and Poulariez, whom he begged to prevent the apprehended disgrace; and, in fact, if Vaudreuil really meant to capitulate for the colony, he was presently dissuaded by firmer spirits than his own.

Johnstone, whose horse could carry him no farther, set out on foot for Beauport, and, in his own words, “continued sorrowfully jogging on, with a very heavy heart for the loss of my dear friend M. de Montcalm, sinking with weariness, and lost in reflection upon the changes which Providence had brought about in the space of three or four hours.”

Great indeed were these changes. Montcalm was dying; his second in command, the Brigadier Senezergues, was mortally wounded; the army, routed and demoralized, was virtually without a head; and the colony, yesterday cheered as on the eve of deliverance, was plunged into sudden despair. "Ah, what a cruel day!" cries Bougainville; "how fatal to all that was dearest to us! My heart is torn in its most tender parts. We shall be fortunate if the approach of winter saves the country from total ruin."¹

The victors were fortifying themselves on the field of battle. Like the French, they had lost two generals; for Monckton, second in rank, was disabled by a musket-shot, and the command had fallen upon Townshend at the moment when the enemy were in full flight. He had recalled the pursuers, and formed them again in line of battle, knowing that another foe was at hand. Bougainville, in fact, appeared at noon from Cap-Rouge with about two thousand men; but withdrew on seeing double that force prepared to receive him. He had not heard till eight o'clock that the English were on the Plains of Abraham; and the delay of his arrival was no doubt due to his endeavors to collect as many as possible of his detachments posted along the St. Lawrence for many miles towards Jacques-Cartier.

Before midnight the English had made good progress in their redoubts and intrenchments, had brought cannon up the heights to defend them, planted a battery on the Côte Ste.-Geneviève, descended into the meadows of the St. Charles, and taken possession of the General Hospital, with its crowds of sick and wounded. Their victory had cost them six hundred and sixty-four of all ranks, killed, wounded, and missing. The French loss is placed by Vaudreuil at about six hundred and forty, and by the English official reports at about fifteen hundred. Measured by the numbers engaged, the battle of Quebec was but a heavy skirmish; measured by results, it was one of the great battles of the world.

¹ Bougainville à Bourlamaque, 18 Sept. 1759.

Vaudreuil went from the hornwork to his quarters on the Beauport road and called a council of war. It was a tumultuous scene. A letter was despatched to Quebec to ask advice of Montcalm. The dying General sent a brief message to the effect that there was a threefold choice,—to fight again, retreat to Jacques-Cartier, or give up the colony. There was much in favor of fighting. When Bougainville had gathered all his force from the river above, he would have three thousand men; and these, joined to the garrison of Quebec, the sailors at the batteries, and the militia and artillerymen of the Beauport camp, would form a body of fresh soldiers more than equal to the English then on the Plains of Abraham. Add to these the defeated troops, and the victors would be greatly outnumbered.¹ Bigot gave his voice for fighting. Vaudreuil expressed himself to the same effect; but he says that all the officers were against him. "In vain I remarked to these gentlemen that we were superior to the enemy, and should beat them if we managed well. I could not at all change their opinion, and my love for the service and for the colony made me subscribe to the views of the council. In fact, if I had attacked the English against the advice of all the principal officers, their ill-will would have exposed me to the risk of losing the battle and the colony also."¹

¹ Bigot, as well as Vaudreuil, sets Bougainville's force at three thousand. "En réunissant le corps de M. de Bougainville, les bataillons de Montréal [laissés au camp de Beauport] et la garnison de la ville, il nous restoit encore près de 5,000 hommes de troupes fraîches." Journal tenu à l'Armée. Vaudreuil says that there were fifteen hundred men in garrison at Quebec who did not take part in the battle. If this is correct, the number of fresh troops after it was not five thousand, but more than six thousand; to whom the defeated force is to be added, making, after deducting killed and wounded, some ten thousand in all.

It was said at the time that the officers voted for retreat because they thought Vaudreuil unfit to command an army, and, still more, to fight a battle.² There was no need, however, to fight at once. The object of the English was to take Quebec, and that of Vaudreuil should have been to keep it. By a march of a few miles he could have joined Bougainville; and by then intrenching himself at or near Ste.-Foy he would have placed a greatly superior force in the English rear, where his position might have been made impregnable. Here he might be easily furnished with provisions, and from hence he could readily throw men and supplies into Quebec, which the English were too few to invest. He could harass the besiegers, or attack them, should opportunity offer, and either raise the siege or so protract it that they would be forced by approaching winter to sail homeward, robbed of the fruit of their victory.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Oct. 1759.

² Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760.

At least he might have taken a night for reflection. He was safe behind the St. Charles. The English, spent by fighting, toil, and want of sleep, were in no condition to disturb him. A part of his own men were in deadly need of rest; the night would have brought refreshment, and the morning might have brought wise counsel. Vaudreuil would not wait, and orders were given at once for retreat.¹ It began at nine o'clock that evening. Quebec was abandoned to its fate. The cannon were left in the lines of Beauport, the tents in the encampments, and provisions enough in the storehouses to supply the army for a week. "The loss of the Marquis de Montcalm," says a French officer then on the spot, "robbed his successors of their senses, and they thought of nothing but flight; such was their fear that the enemy would attack the intrenchments the next day. The army abandoned the camp in such disorder that the like was never known."² "It was not a retreat," says Johnstone, who was himself a part of it, "but an abominable flight, with such disorder and confusion that, had the English known it, three hundred men sent after us would have been sufficient to cut all our army to pieces. The soldiers were all mixed, scattered, dispersed, and running as hard as they could, as if the English army were at their heels." They passed Charlesbourg, Lorette, and St. Augustin, till, on the fifteenth, they found rest on the impregnable hill of Jacques-Cartier, by the brink of the St. Lawrence, thirty miles from danger.

¹ Livre d'Ordres, Ordre du 13 Sept. 1759.

² Foligny, Journal mémoratif.

In the night of humiliation when Vaudreuil abandoned Quebec, Montcalm was breathing his last within its walls. When he was brought wounded from the field, he was placed in the house of the Surgeon Arnoux, who was then with Bourlamaque at Isle-aux-Noix, but whose younger brother, also a surgeon, examined the wound and pronounced it mortal. "I am glad of it," Montcalm said quietly; and then asked how long he had to live. "Twelve hours, more or less," was the reply. "So much the better," he returned. "I am happy that I shall not live to see the surrender of Quebec." He is reported to have said that since he had lost the battle it consoled him to have been defeated by so brave an enemy; and some of his last words were in praise of his successor, Lévis, for whose talents and fitness for command he expressed high esteem. When Vaudreuil sent to ask his opinion, he gave it; but when Ramesay, commandant of the garrison, came to receive his orders, he replied: "I will neither give orders nor interfere any further. I have much business that must be attended to, of greater moment than your ruined garrison and this wretched country. My time is very short; therefore pray leave me. I wish you all comfort, and to be happily extricated from your present perplexities." Nevertheless he thought to the last of those who had been under his command, and sent the following note to Brigadier Townshend:

“Monsieur, the humanity of the English sets my mind at peace concerning the fate of the French prisoners and the Canadians. Feel towards them as they have caused me to feel. Do not let them perceive that they have changed masters. Be their protector as I have been their father.”¹

Bishop Pontbriand, himself fast sinking with mortal disease, attended his death-bed and administered the last sacraments. He died peacefully at four o'clock on the morning of the fourteenth. He was in his forty-eighth year.

In the confusion of the time no workman could be found to make a coffin, and an old servant of the Ursulines, known as Bonhomme Michel, gathered a few boards and nailed them together so as to form a rough box. In it was laid the body of the dead soldier; and late in the evening of the same day he was carried to his rest. There was no tolling of bells or firing of cannon. The officers of the garrison followed the bier, and some of the populace, including women and children, joined the procession as it moved in dreary silence along the dusky street, shattered with cannon-ball and bomb, to the chapel of the Ursuline convent. Here a shell, bursting under the floor, had made a cavity which had been hollowed into a grave. Three priests of the Cathedral, several nuns, Ramesay with his officers, and a throng of townspeople were present at the rite. After the service and the chant, the body was lowered into the grave by the light of torches; and then, says the chronicle, "the tears and sobs burst forth. It seemed as if the last hope of the colony were buried with the remains of the General."¹ In truth, the funeral of Montcalm was the funeral of New France.²

¹ I am indebted to Abbé Bois for a copy of this note. The last words of Montcalm, as above, are reported partly by Johnstone, and partly by Knox.

It was no time for grief. The demands of the hour were too exigent and stern. When, on the morning after the battle, the people of Quebec saw the tents standing in the camp of Beauport, they thought the army still there to defend them.³ Ramesay knew that the hope was vain. On the evening before, Vaudreuil had sent two hasty notes to tell him of his flight. "The position of the enemy," wrote the Governor, "becomes stronger every instant; and this, with other reasons, obliges me to retreat." "I have received all your letters. As I set out this moment, I pray you not to write again. You shall hear from me to-morrow. I wish you good evening." With these notes came the following order: "M. de Ramesay is not to wait till the enemy carries the town by assault. As soon as provisions fail, he will raise the white flag." This order was accompanied by a memorandum of terms which Ramesay was to ask of the victors.⁴

"What a blow for me," says the unfortunate commandant, "to find myself abandoned so soon

¹ Ursulines de Québec, III. 10.

² See Appendix J.

³ Mémoire du Sieur de Ramesay.

⁴ Mémoire pour servir d'Instruction à M. de Ramesay, 13 Sept. 1759. Appended, with the foregoing notes, to the Mémoire de Ramesay.

by the army, which alone could defend the town!" His garrison consisted of between one and two hundred troops of the line, some four or five hundred colony troops, a considerable number of sailors, and the local militia.¹ These last were in a state of despair. The inhabitants who, during the siege, had sought refuge in the suburb of St. Roch, had returned after the battle, and there were now twenty-six hundred women and children, with about a thousand invalids and other non-combatants to be supported, though the provisions in the town, even at half rations, would hardly last a week. Ramesay had not been informed that a good supply was left in the camps of Beauport; and when he heard at last that it was there, and sent out parties to get it, they found that the Indians and the famished country people had carried it off.

"Despondency," he says again, "was complete; discouragement extreme and universal. Murmurs and complaints against the army that had abandoned us rose to a general outcry. I could not prevent the merchants, all of whom were officers of the town militia, from meeting at the house of M. Daine, the mayor. There they declared for capitulating, and presented me a petition to that effect, signed by M. Daine and all the principal citizens."

Ramesay called a council of war. One officer alone, Fiedmont, captain of artillery, was for reducing the rations still more, and holding out to the last. All the others gave their voices for capitulation.¹ Ramesay might have yielded without dishonor; but he still held out till an event fraught with new hope took place at Jacques-Cartier.

¹ The English returns give a total of 615 French regulars in the place besides sailors and militia.

This event was the arrival of Lévis. On the afternoon of the battle Vaudreuil took one rational step; he sent a courier to Montreal to summon that able officer to his aid.² Lévis set out at once, reached Jacques-Cartier, and found his worst fears realized. "The great number of fugitives that I began to meet at Three Rivers prepared me for the disorder in which I found the army. I never in my life knew the like of it. They left everything behind in the camp at Beauport; tents, baggage, and kettles."

He spoke his mind freely; loudly blamed the retreat, and urged Vaudreuil to march back with all speed to whence he came.³ The Governor, stiff at ordinary times, but pliant at a crisis, welcomed the firmer mind that decided for him, consented that the troops should return, and wrote afterwards in his despatch to the Minister: "I was much charmed to find M. de Lévis disposed to march with the army towards Quebec."⁴

Lévis, on his part, wrote: "The condition in which I found the army, bereft of everything, did

¹ Copie du Conseil de Guerre tenu par M. de Ramesay à Québec, 15 Sept. 1759.

² Lévis à Bourlamaque, 15 Sept. 1759. Lévis, Guerre du Canada.

³ Bigot au Ministre, 15 Oct. 1759. Malartic à Bourlamaque, 28 Sept. 1759.

⁴ "Je fus bien charmé," etc. Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Oct. 1759.

not discourage me, because M. de Vaudreuil told me that Quebec was not taken, and that he had left there a sufficiently numerous garrison; I therefore resolved, in order to repair the fault that had been committed, to engage M. de Vaudreuil to march the army back to the relief of the place. I represented to him that this was the only way to prevent the complete defection of the Canadians and Indians; that our knowledge of the country would enable us to approach very near the enemy, whom we knew to be intrenching themselves on the heights of Quebec and constructing batteries to breach the walls; that if we found their army ill posted, we could attack them, or, at any rate, could prolong the siege by throwing men and supplies into the town; and that if we could not save it, we could evacuate and burn it, so that the enemy could not possibly winter there.”¹

Lévis quickly made his presence felt in the military chaos about him. Bigot bestirred himself with his usual vigor to collect provisions; and before the next morning all was ready.² Bougainville had taken no part in the retreat, but sturdily held his ground at Cap-Rouge while the fugitive mob swept by him. A hundred of the mounted Canadians who formed part of his command were now sent to Quebec, each with a bag of biscuit across his saddle. They were to circle round to the Beauport side, where there was no enemy, and whence they could cross the

¹ Lévis au Ministre, 10 Nov. 1759.

² Livre d'Ordres, Ordre du 17-18 Sept. 1759.

St. Charles in canoes to the town. Bougainville followed close with a larger supply. Vaudreuil sent Ramesay a message, revoking his order to surrender if threatened with assault, telling him to hold out to the last, and assuring him that the whole army was coming to his relief. Lévis hastened to be gone; but first he found time to write a few lines to Bourlamaque. "We have had a very great loss, for we have lost M. de Montcalm. I regret him as my general and my friend. I found our army here. It is now on the march to retrieve our fortunes. I can trust you to hold your position; as I have not M. de Montcalm's talents, I look to you to second me and advise me. Put a good face on it. Hide this business as long as you can. I am mounting my horse this moment. Write me all the news."¹

The army marched that morning, the eighteenth. In the evening it reached St. Augustin; and here it was stopped by the chilling news that Quebec had surrendered.

Utter confusion had reigned in the disheartened garrison. Men deserted hourly, some to the country, and some to the English camp; while Townshend pushed his trenches nearer and nearer to the walls, in spite of the cannonade with which Fiedmont and his artillerymen tried to check them. On the evening of the seventeenth, the English ships of war moved towards the Lower Town, and a column of troops was seen approaching over the meadows of the St. Charles, as if to storm the Palace Gate.

¹ Lévis à Bourlamaque, 18 Sept. 1759.

The drums beat the alarm ; but the militia refused to fight. Their officers came to Ramesay in a body ; declared that they had no mind to sustain an assault ; that they knew he had orders against it ; that they would carry their guns back to the arsenal ; that they were no longer soldiers, but citizens ; that if the army had not abandoned them they would fight with as much spirit as ever ; but that they would not get themselves killed to no purpose. The town-major, Joannès, in a rage, beat two of them with the flat of his sword.

The white flag was raised ; Joannès pulled it down, thinking, or pretending to think, that it was raised without authority ; but Ramesay presently ordered him to go to the English camp and get what terms he could. He went, through driving rain, to the quarters of Townshend, and, in hope of the promised succor, spun out the negotiation to the utmost, pretended that he had no power to yield certain points demanded, and was at last sent back to confer with Ramesay, under a promise from the English commander that, if Quebec were not given up before eleven o'clock, he would take it by storm. On this Ramesay signed the articles, and Joannès carried them back within the time prescribed. Scarcely had he left the town, when the Canadian horsemen appeared with their sacks of biscuit and a renewed assurance that help was near ; but it was too late. Ramesay had surrendered, and would not break his word. He dreaded an assault, which he knew he could not withstand, and he but half believed in the promised succor. "How could I trust it?" he asks. "The army had not dared to face the enemy before he had fortified himself; and could I hope that it would come to attack him in an intrenched camp, defended by a formidable artillery?" Whatever may be thought of his conduct, it was to Vaudreuil, and not to him, that the loss of Quebec was due.

The conditions granted were favorable, for Townshend knew the danger of his position, and was glad to have Quebec on any terms. The troops and sailors of the garrison were to march out of the place with the honors of war, and to be carried to France. The inhabitants were to have protection in person and property, and free exercise of religion.¹

In the afternoon a company of artillerymen with a field-piece entered the town, and marched to the place of arms, followed by a body of infantry. Detachments took post at all the gates. The British flag was raised on the heights near the top of Mountain Street, and the capital of New France passed into the hands of its hereditary foes. The question remained, should they keep, or destroy it? It was resolved to keep it at every risk. The marines, the grenadiers from Louisbourg, and some of the rangers were to re-imbark in the fleet; while the ten battalions, with the artillery and one company of rangers, were to remain behind, bide the Canadian winter, and defend the ruins of Quebec against the efforts of

¹ Articles de Capitulation, 18 Sept. 1759.

Lévis. Monckton, the oldest brigadier, was disabled by his wound, and could not stay; while Townshend returned home, to parade his laurels and claim more than his share of the honors of victory.¹ The command, therefore, rested with Murray.

The troops were not idle. Levelling their own field-works, repairing the defences of the town, storing provisions sent ashore from the fleet, making fascines, and cutting firewood, busied them through the autumn days bright with sunshine, or dark and chill with premonition of the bitter months to come. Admiral Saunders put off his departure longer than he had once thought possible; and it was past the middle of October when he fired a parting salute, and sailed down the river with his fleet. In it was the ship "Royal William," carrying the embalmed remains of Wolfe.

Montcalm lay in his soldier's grave before the humble altar of the Ursulines, never more to see the home for which he yearned, the wife, mother, and children whom he loved, the olive-trees and chestnut-groves of his beloved Candiac. He slept in peace among triumphant enemies, who respected his memory, though they hardly knew his resting-place. It was left for a fellow-countryman — a colleague and a brother-in-arms — to belittle his achievements and blacken his name. The jealous spite of Vaudreuil pursued him even in death. Leaving Lévis to command at Jacques-Cartier, whither the army had again withdrawn, the Governor retired to Montreal, whence he wrote a series of despatches to justify himself at the expense of others, and above all of the slain general, against whom his accusations were never so bitter as now, when the lips were cold that could have answered them. First, he threw on Ramesay all the blame of the surrender of Quebec. Then he addressed himself to his chief task, the defamation of his unconscious rival. "The letter that you wrote in cipher, on the tenth of February, to Monsieur the Marquis of Montcalm and me, in common,¹ flattered his self-love to such a degree that, far from seeking conciliation, he did nothing but try to persuade the public that his authority surpassed mine. From the moment of Monsieur de Montcalm's arrival in this colony, down to that of his death, he did not cease to sacrifice everything to his boundless ambition. He sowed dissension among the troops, tolerated the most indecent talk against the government, attached to himself the most disreputable persons, used means to corrupt the most virtuous, and, when he could not succeed, became their cruel enemy. He wanted to be Governor-General. He privately flattered with favors and promises of patronage every officer of the colony troops who adopted his ideas. He spared no pains to gain over the people of whatever calling, and persuade them of his attachment; while, either by himself or by means of the troops of the line, he made them bear the most frightful yoke (le joug le plus affreux). He defamed honest people, encouraged insubordination, and closed his eyes to the rapine of his soldiers."

¹ Letter to an Honourable Brigadier-General [Townshend], printed in 1760. A Refutation soon after appeared, angry, but not conclusive. Other replies will be found in the Imperial Magazine for 1760.

¹ See ante, p. 167.

This letter was written to Vaudreuil's official superior and confidant, the Minister of the Marine and Colonies. In another letter, written about the same time to the Minister of War, who held similar relations to his rival, he declares that he "greatly regretted Monsieur de Montcalm."¹

His charges are strange ones from a man who was by turns the patron, advocate, and tool of the official villains who cheated the King and plundered the people. Bigot, Cadet, and the rest of the harpies that preyed on Canada looked to Vaudreuil for support, and found it. It was but three or four weeks since he had written to the Court in high eulogy of Bigot and effusive praise of Cadet, coupled with the request that a patent of nobility should be given to that notorious public thief.² The corruptions which disgraced his government were rife, not only in the civil administration, but also among the officers of the colony troops, over whom he had complete control. They did not, as has been seen already, extend to the officers of the line, who were outside the circle of peculation. It was these who were the habitual associates of Montcalm; and when Vaudreuil charges him with "attaching to himself the most disreputable persons, and using means to corrupt the most virtuous," the true interpretation of his words is that the former were disreputable because they disliked him (the Governor), and the latter virtuous because they were his partisans.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre de la Guerre, 1 Nov. 1759.

² See ante, p. 31.

Vaudreuil continues thus: "I am in despair, Monseigneur, to be under the necessity of painting you such a portrait after death of Monsieur the Marquis of Montcalm. Though it contains the exact truth, I would have deferred it if his personal hatred to me were alone to be considered; but I feel too deeply the loss of the colony to hide from you the cause of it. I can assure you that if I had been the sole master, Quebec would still belong to the King, and that nothing is so disadvantageous in a colony as a division of authority and the mingling of troops of the line with marine [colony] troops. Thoroughly knowing Monsieur de Montcalm, I did not doubt in the least that unless I condescended to all his wishes, he would succeed in ruining Canada and wrecking all my plans."

He then charges the dead man with losing the battle of Quebec by attacking before he, the Governor, arrived to take command; and this, he says, was due to Montcalm's absolute determination to exercise independent authority, without caring whether the colony was saved or lost. "I cannot hide from you, Monseigneur, that if he had had his way in past years Oswego and Fort George [William Henry] would never have been attacked or taken; and he owed the success at Ticonderoga to the orders I had given him.”¹ Montcalm, on the other hand, declared at the time that Vaudreuil had ordered him not to risk a battle, and that it was only through his disobedience that Ticonderoga was saved.

Ten days later Vaudreuil wrote again: “I have already had the honor, by my letter written in cipher on the thirtieth of last month, to give you a sketch of the character of Monsieur the Marquis of Montcalm; but I have just been informed of a stroke so black that I think, Monseigneur, that I should fail in my duty to you if I did not tell you of it.” He goes on to say that, a little before his death, and “no doubt in fear of the fate that befell him,” Montcalm placed in the hands of Father Roubaud, missionary at St. Francis, two packets of papers containing remarks on the administration of the colony, and especially on the manner in which the military posts were furnished with supplies; that these observations were accompanied by certificates; and that they involved charges against him, the Governor, of complicity in speculation. Roubaud, he continues, was to send these papers to France; “but now, Monseigneur, that you are informed about them, I feel no anxiety, and I am sure that the King will receive no impression from them without acquainting himself with their truth or falsity.”

Vaudreuil’s anxiety was natural; and so was the action of Montcalm in making known to the Court the outrageous abuses that threatened the King's service with ruin. His doing so was necessary, both for his own justification and for the public good; and afterwards, when Vaudreuil and others were brought to trial at Paris, and when one of the counsel for the defence charged the late general with slanderously accusing his clients, the Court ordered the charge to be struck from the record.¹ The papers the existence of which, if they did exist, so terrified Vaudreuil, have thus far escaped research. But the correspondence of the two rivals with the chiefs of the departments on which they severally depended is in large measure preserved; and while that of the Governor is filled with defamation of Montcalm and praise of himself, that of the General is neither egotistic nor abusive. The faults of Montcalm have sufficiently appeared. They were those of an impetuous, excitable, and impatient nature, by no means free from either ambition or vanity; but they were never inconsistent with the character of a man of honor. His impulsive utterances, reported by retainers and sycophants, kept Vaudreuil in a state of chronic rage; and, void as he was of all magnanimity, gnawed with undying jealousy, and mortally in dread of being compromised by the knaveries to which he had lent his countenance, he could not contain himself within the bounds of decency or sense. In another letter he had the baseness to say that Montcalm met his death in trying to escape from the English.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre de la Marine, 30 Oct. 1759.

¹ Procès de Bigot, Cadet, et autres.

Among the Governor's charges are some which cannot be flatly denied. When he accuses his rival of haste and precipitation in attacking the English army, he touches a fair subject of criticism; but, as a whole, he is as false in his detraction of Montcalm as in his praises of Bigot and Cadet.

The letter which Wolfe sent to Pitt a few days before his death, written in what may be called a spirit of resolute despair, and representing success as almost hopeless, filled England with a dejection that found utterance in loud grumblings against the Ministry. Horace Walpole wrote the bad news to his friend Mann, ambassador at Florence: "Two days ago came letters from Wolfe, despairing as much as heroes can despair. Quebec is well victualled, Amherst is not arrived, and fifteen thousand men are encamped to defend it. We have lost many men by the enemy, and some by our friends; that is, we now call our nine thousand only seven thousand. How this little army will get away from a much larger, and in this season, in that country, I don't guess: yes, I do."

Hardly were these lines written when tidings came that Montcalm was defeated, Quebec taken, and Wolfe killed. A flood of mixed emotion swept over England. Even Walpole grew half serious as he sent a packet of newspapers to his friend the ambassador. "You may now give yourself what airs you please. An ambassador is the only man in the world whom bullying becomes. All precedents are on your side: Persians, Greeks, Romans, always insulted their neighbors when they took Quebec. Think how pert the French would have been on such an occasion! What a scene! An army in the night dragging itself up a precipice by stumps of trees to assault a town and attack an enemy strongly intrenched and double in numbers! The King is overwhelmed with addresses on our victories; he will have enough to paper his palace.”¹

When, in soberer mood, he wrote the annals of his time, and turned, not for the better, from the epistolary style to the historical, he thus described the impression made on the English public by the touching and inspiring story of Wolfe's heroism and death: “The incidents of dramatic fiction could not be conducted with more address to lead an audience from despondency to sudden exaltation than accident prepared to excite the passions of a whole people. They despaired, they triumphed, and they wept; for Wolfe had fallen in the hour of victory. Joy, curiosity, astonishment, was painted on every countenance. The more they inquired, the more their admiration rose. Not an incident but was heroic and affecting.”² England blazed with bonfires. In one spot alone all was dark and silent; for here a widowed mother mourned for a loving and devoted son, and the people forbore to profane her grief with the clamor of their rejoicings.

New England had still more cause of joy than Old, and she filled the land with jubilation. The pulpits resounded with sermons of thanksgiving, some of which were worthy of the occasion that called them forth. Among the rest, Jonathan Mayhew, a young but justly celebrated minister of Boston, pictured with enthusiasm the future greatness of the British-American colonies, with the continent thrown open before them, and foretold that, "with the continued blessing of Heaven, they will become, in another century or two, a mighty empire;" adding in cautious parenthesis, "I do not mean an independent one." He read Wolfe's victory aright, and divined its far-reaching consequence.

¹ Letters of Horace Walpole, III. 254, 257 (ed. Cunningham, 1857).

² Walpole, Memoirs of George II., II. 384.

NOTE. — The authorities of this chapter are, in the main, the same as those of the preceding, with some additions, the principal of which is the Mémoire du Sieur de Ramezay, Chevalier de l'Ordre royal et militaire de St.-Louis, cy-devant Lieutenant pour le Roy commandant à Québec, au sujet de la Reddition de cette Ville, qui a été suivie de la Capitulation du 18 7bre, 1759 (Archives de la Marine). To this document are appended a number of important "pièces justificatives." These, with the Mémoire, have been printed by the Quebec Historical Society. The letters of Vaudreuil cited in this chapter are chiefly from the Archives Nationales.

If Montcalm, as Vaudreuil says, really intrusted papers to the care of the Jesuit missionary Roubaud, he was not fortunate in his choice of a depositary. After the war Roubaud renounced his Order, abjured his faith, and went over to the English. He gave various and contradictory accounts of the documents said to be in his hands. On one occasion he declared that Montcalm's effects left with him at his mission of St. Francis had been burned to prevent their falling into the hands of the enemy (see Verreau, Report on Canadian Archives, 1874, p. 183). Again, he says that he had placed in the hands of the King of England certain letters of Montcalm (see Mr. Roubaud's Deplorable Case, humbly submitted to Lord North's Consideration, in Historical Magazine, Second Series, VIII. 283). Yet again, he speaks of these same letters as "pretended" (Verreau, as above). He complains that some of them had been published, without his consent, "by a Lord belonging to His Majesty's household" (Mr. Roubaud's Deplorable Case).

The allusion here is evidently to a pamphlet printed in London, in 1777, in French and English, and entitled, Lettres de Monsieur le Marquis de Montcalm, Gouverneur-Général en Canada, à Messieurs de Berryer et de la Molé, écrites dans les Années 1757, 1758, et 1759, avec une Version Angloise. They profess to be observations by Montcalm on the English colonies, their political character, their trade, and their tendency to independence. They bear the strongest marks of being fabricated to suit the times, the colonies being then in revolt. The principal letter is one addressed to Molé, and bearing date Quebec, Aug. 24, 1759. It foretells the loss of her colonies as a consequence to England of her probable conquest of Canada. I laid before the Massachusetts Historical Society my reasons for believing this letter, like the rest, an imposture (see the Proceedings of that Society for 1869-1870, pp. 112-128). To these reasons it may be added that at the date assigned to the letter all correspondence was stopped between Canada and France. From the arrival of the English fleet, at the end of spring, till its departure, late in autumn, communication was completely cut off. It was not till towards the end of November, when the river was clear of English ships, that the naval commander Kanon ran by the batteries of Quebec and carried to France the first news from Canada. Some of the letters thus sent were dated a month before, and had waited in Canada till Kanon's departure.

Abbé Verreau — a high authority on questions of Canadian history — tells me a comparison of the handwriting has convinced him that these pretended letters of Montcalm are the work of Roubaud.

On the burial of Montcalm, see Appendix J.

CHAPTER XXIX.

1759, 1760.

SAINTE-FOY.

QUEBEC AFTER THE SIEGE. — CAPTAIN KNOX AND THE NUNS. — ESCAPE OF FRENCH SHIPS. — WINTER AT QUEBEC. — THREATS OF LÉVIS. — ATTACKS. — SKIRMISHES. — FEAT OF THE RANGERS. — STATE OF THE GARRISON. — THE FRENCH PREPARE TO RETAKE QUEBEC. — ADVANCE OF LÉVIS. — THE ALARM. — SORTIE OF THE ENGLISH. — RASH DETERMINATION OF MURRAY. — BATTLE OF STE.-FOY. — RETREAT OF THE ENGLISH. — LÉVIS BESIEGES QUEBEC. — SPIRIT OF THE GARRISON. — PERIL OF THEIR SITUATION. — RELIEF. — QUEBEC SAVED. — RETREAT OF LÉVIS. — THE NEWS IN ENGLAND.

THE fleet was gone ; the great river was left a solitude ; and the chill days of a fitful November passed over Quebec in alternations of rain and frost, sunshine and snow. The troops, driven by cold from their encampment on the Plains, were all gathered within the walls. Their own artillery had so battered the place that it was not easy to find shelter. The Lower Town was a wilderness of scorched and crumbling walls. As you ascended Mountain Street, the Bishop's Palace, on the right, was a skeleton of tottering masonry, and the buildings on the left were a mass of ruin, where ragged boys were playing at see-saw among the fallen planks and timbers.¹ Even in the Upper ¹ Drawings made on the spot by Richard Short. These drawings, twelve in number, were engraved and published in 1761.

Town few of the churches and public buildings had escaped. The Cathedral was burned to a shell. The solid front of the College of the Jesuits was pockmarked by numberless cannon-balls, and the adjacent church of the Order was wofully shattered. The church of the Recollets suffered still more. The bombshells that fell through the roof had broken into the pavement, and as they burst had thrown up the bones and skulls of the dead from the graves beneath.¹ Even the more distant Hôtel-Dieu was pierced by fifteen projectiles, some of which had exploded in the halls and chambers.²

The Commissary-General, Berniers, thus describes to Bourlamaque the state of the town: "Quebec is nothing but a shapeless mass of ruins. Confusion, disorder, pillage reign even among the inhabitants, for the English make examples of severity every day. Everybody rushes hither and thither, without knowing why. Each searches for his possessions, and, not finding his own, seizes those of other people. English and French, all is chaos alike. The inhabitants, famished and destitute, escape to the country. Never was there seen such a sight."³

Quebec swarmed with troops. There were guard-houses at twenty different points; sentinels paced the ramparts, squads of men went the rounds, soldiers off duty strolled the streets, some in mitre

¹ Short's Views in Quebec, 1759. Compare Pontbriand, in N. Y. Col. Docs, X. 1.057.

² Casgrain, Hôtel-Dieu de Québec, 445.

³ Berniers à Bourlamaque, 27 Sept. 1759.

caps and some in black three-cornered hats ; while a ceaseless rolling of drums and a rigid observance of military forms betrayed the sense of a still imminent danger. While some of the inhabitants left town, others remained, having no refuge elsewhere. They were civil to the victors, but severe towards their late ruler. "The citizens," says Knox, "particularly the females, reproach M. Vaudreuil upon every occasion, and give full scope to bitter invectives." He praises the agreeable manners and cheerful spirit of the Canadian ladies, concerning whom another officer also writes: "It is very surprising with what ease the gayety of their tempers enables them to bear misfortunes which to us would be insupportable. Families whom the calamities of war have reduced from the height of luxury to the want of common necessities laugh, dance, and sing, comforting themselves with this reflection — Fortune de guerre. Their young ladies take the utmost pains to teach our officers French ; with what view I know not, if it is not that they may hear themselves praised, flattered, and courted without loss of time." ¹

Knox was quartered in a small stable, with a hayloft above and a rack and manger at one end : a lodging better than fell to the lot of many of his brother officers ; and, by means of a stove and some help from a carpenter, he says that he made himself tolerably comfortable. The change, however, was an agreeable one when he was ordered for a week to the General Hospital, a mile out of the town, where he was to command the guard stationed to protect the inmates and watch the enemy. Here were gathered the sick and wounded of both armies, nursed with equal care by the nuns, of whom Knox speaks with gratitude and respect. "When our poor fellows were ill and ordered to be removed from their odious regimental hospital to this general receptacle, they were indeed rendered inexpressibly happy. Each patient has his bed, with curtains, allotted to him, and a nurse to attend him. Every sick or wounded officer has an apartment to himself, and is attended by one of these religious sisters, who in general are young, handsome, courteous, rigidly reserved, and very respectful. Their office of nursing the sick furnishes them with opportunities of taking great latitudes if they are so disposed; but I never heard any of them charged with the least levity." The nuns, on their part, were well pleased with the conduct of their new masters, whom one of them describes as the "most moderate of all conquerors."

¹ Alexander Campbell to John Lloyd, 22 Oct. 1759. Campbell was a lieutenant of the Highlanders ; Lloyd was a Connecticut merchant.

"I lived here," Knox continues, "at the French King's table, with an agreeable, polite society of officers, directors, and commissaries. Some of the gentlemen were married, and their ladies honored us with their company. They were generally cheerful, except when we discoursed on the late revolution and the affairs of the campaign; then they seemingly gave way to grief, uttered by profound sighs, followed by an O mon Dieu!" He walked in the garden with the French officers, played at cards with them, and passed the time so pleasantly that his short stay at the hospital seemed an oasis in his hard life of camp and garrison.

Mère de Sainte-Claude, the Superior, a sister of Ramesay, late commandant of Quebec, one morning sent him a note of invitation to what she called an English breakfast; and though the repast answered to nothing within his experience, he says that he "fared exceedingly well, and passed near two hours most agreeably in the society of this ancient lady and her virgin sisters."

The excellent nuns of the General Hospital are to-day what their predecessors were, and the scene of their useful labors still answers at many points to that described by the careful pen of their military guest. Throughout the war they and the nuns of the Hôtel-Dieu had been above praise in their assiduous devotion to the sick and wounded.

Brigadier Murray, now in command of Quebec, was a gallant soldier, upright, humane, generous, eager for distinction, and more daring than prudent. He befriended the Canadians, issued strict orders against harming them in person or property, hanged a soldier who had robbed a citizen of Quebec, and severely punished others for slighter offences of the same sort. In general the soldiers themselves showed kindness towards the conquered people; during harvest they were seen helping them to reap their fields, without compensation, and sharing with them their tobacco and rations. The inhabitants were disarmed, and required to take the oath of allegiance. Murray reported in the spring that the whole country, from Cap-Rouge downward, was in subjection to the British Crown.¹

Late in October it was rumored that some of the French ships in the river above Quebec were preparing to run by the batteries. This was the squadron which had arrived in the spring with supplies, and had lain all summer at Batiscan, in the Richelieu, and at other points beyond reach of the English. After nearly a month of expectancy, they at length appeared, anchored off Sillery on the twenty-first of November, and tried to pass the town on the dark night of the twenty-fourth. Seven or eight of them succeeded; four others ran aground and were set on fire by their crews, excepting one which was stranded on the south shore and abandoned. Captain Miller, with a lieutenant and above forty men, boarded her; when, apparently through their own carelessness, she blew up.² Most of the party were killed by the explosion, and the rest, including the two officers, were left in a horrible condition between life and death. Thus they remained till a Canadian, venturing on board in search of plunder, found them, called his neighbors to his aid, carried them to his own house, and after applying, with the utmost kindness, what simple remedies he knew, went over to Quebec and told of the disaster. Fortunately for themselves, the sufferers soon died.

¹ Murray to Pitt, 25 May, 1760. Murray, Journal, 1759, 1760.

² Murray to Amherst, 25 Jan. 1760. Not, as some believed, by a train laid by the French.

December came, and brought the Canadian winter, with its fierce light and cold, glaring snow-fields, and piercing blasts that scorch the cheek like a firebrand. The men were frost-bitten as they dug away the dry, powdery drifts that the wind had piled against the rampart. The sentries were relieved every hour; yet feet and fingers were continually frozen. The clothing of the troops was ill-suited to the climate, and, though stoves had been placed in the guard and barrack rooms, the supply of fuel constantly fell short. The cutting and dragging of wood was the chief task of the garrison for many weeks. Parties of axemen, strongly guarded, were always at work in the forest of Ste.-Foy, four or five miles from Quebec, and the logs were brought to town on sledges dragged by the soldiers. Eight of them were harnessed in pairs to each sledge; and as there was always danger from Indians and bush-rangers, every man carried his musket slung at his back. The labor was prodigious; for frequent snowstorms made it necessary again and again to beat a fresh track through the drifts. The men bore their hardships with admirable good humor; and once a party of them on their return, dragging their load through the street, met a Canadian, also with a load of wood, which was drawn by a team of dogs harnessed much like themselves. They accosted them as yoke-fellows, comrades, and brothers; asked them what allowance of pork and rum they got; and invited them and their owner to mess at the regimental barracks.

The appearance of the troops on duty within the town, as described by Knox, was scarcely less eccentric. "Our guards on the grand parade make a most grotesque appearance in their different dresses; and our inventions to guard us against the extreme rigor of this climate are various beyond imagination. The uniformity as well as nicety of the clean, methodical soldier is buried in the rough, fur-wrought garb of the frozen Laplander; and we rather resemble a masquerade than a body of regular troops, insomuch that I have frequently been accosted by my acquaintances, whom, though their voices were familiar to me, I could not discover, or conceive who they were. Besides, every man seems to be in a continual hurry; for instead of walking soberly through the streets, we are obliged to observe a running or trotting pace."

Early in January there was a storm of sleet, followed by severe frost, which glazed the streets with ice. Knox, being ordered to mount guard in the Lower Town, found the descent of Mountain Street so slippery that it was impossible to walk down with safety, especially as the muskets of the men were loaded; and the whole party, seating themselves on the ground, slid one after another to the foot of the hill. The Highlanders, in spite of their natural hardihood, suffered more from the cold than the other troops, as their national costume was but a sorry defence against the Canadian winter. A detachment of these breechless warriors being on guard at the General Hospital, the nuns spent their scanty leisure in knitting for them long woollen hose, which they gratefully accepted, though at a loss to know whether modesty or charity inspired the gift.

From the time when the English took possession of Quebec, reports had come in through deserters that Lévis meant to attack and recover it. Early in November there was a rumor that he was about to march upon it with fifteen thousand men. In December word came that he was on his way, resolved to storm it on or about the twenty-second, and dine within the walls, under the French flag, on Christmas Day. He failed to appear; but in January a deserter said that he had prepared scaling-ladders, and was training his men to use them by assaults on mock ramparts of snow. There was more tangible evidence that the enemy was astir. Murray had established two fortified outposts, one at Ste.-Foy, and the other farther on, at Old Lorette. War-parties hovered round both, and kept the occupants in alarm. A large body of French grenadiers appeared at the latter place in February, and drove off a herd of cattle; when a detachment of rangers, much inferior in number, set upon them, put them to flight, and recovered the plunder. At the same time a party of regulars, Canadians, and Indians took up a strong position near the church at Point Levi, and sent a message to the English officers that a large company of expert hairdressers were ready to wait upon them whenever they required their services. The allusion was of course to the scalp-lifting practices of the Indians and bushrangers.

The river being now hard frozen, Murray sent over a detachment of light infantry under Major Dalling. A sharp fight ensued on the snow, around the church, and in the neighboring forest, where the English soldiers, taught to use snowshoes by the rangers, routed the enemy, and killed or captured a considerable number. A third post was then established at the church and the priest's house adjacent. Some days after, the French came back in large numbers, fortified themselves with felled trees, and then attacked the English position. The firing being heard at Quebec, the light infantry went over to the scene of action, and Murray himself followed on the ice, with the Highlanders and other troops. Before he came up, the French drew off and retreated to their breastwork, where they were attacked and put to flight, the nimble Highlanders capturing a few, while the greater part made their escape.

As it became known that the French held a strong post at Le Calvaire, near St. Augustin, two days' march from Quebec, Captain Donald MacDonald was sent with five hundred men to attack it. He found the enemy behind a breastwork of logs protected by an abattis. The light infantry advanced and poured in a brisk fire; on which the French threw down their arms and fled. About eighty of them were captured; but their commander, Herbin, escaped, leaving to the victors his watch, hat and feather, wine, liquor-case, and mistress. The English had six men wounded and nearly a hundred frost-bitten.¹

Captain Hazen and his rangers soon after had a notable skirmish. They were posted in a house not far from the station at Lorette. A scout came in with news that a large party of the enemy was coming to attack them; on which Hazen left a sergeant and fourteen men in the house, and set out for Lorette with the rest to ask a reinforcement. On the way he met the French, who tried to surround him; and he told his men to fall back to the house. They remonstrated, saying that they "felt spry," and wanted to show the regulars that provincials could fight as well as red-coats. Thereupon they charged the enemy, gave them a close volley of buckshot and bullets, and put them to flight; but scarcely had they reloaded their guns when they were fired upon from behind. Another body of assailants had got into their rear, in order to cut them off. They faced about, attacked them, and drove them back like the first. The two French parties then joined forces, left Hazen to pursue his march, and attacked the fourteen rangers in the house, who met them with a brisk fire. Hazen and his men heard the noise; and, hastening back, fell upon the rear of the French, while those in the house sallied and attacked them in front. They were again routed; and the rangers chased them two miles, killing six of them and capturing seven. Knox, in whose eyes provincials usually find no favor, launches this time into warm commendation of "our simply honest New England men."

¹ Knox, II. 275. Murray, Journal. Fraser, Journal. Vaudreuil, in his usual way, multiplies the English force by three.

Fresh reports came in from time to time that the French were gathering all their strength to recover Quebec; and late in February these stories took a definite shape. A deserter from Montreal brought Murray a letter from an officer of rangers, who was a prisoner at that place, warning him that eleven thousand men were on the point of marching to attack him. Three other deserters soon after confirmed the news, but added that the scheme had met with a check; for as it was intended to carry the town by storm, a grand rehearsal had taken place, with the help of scaling-ladders planted against the wall of a church; whereupon the Canadians rushed with such zeal to the assault that numerous broken legs, arms, and heads ensued, along with ruptures, sprains, bruises, and dislocations; insomuch, said the story, that they became disgusted with the attempt. All remained quiet till after the middle of April, when the garrison was startled by repeated assurances that at the first breaking-up of the ice all Canada would be upon them. Murray accordingly ordered the French inhabitants to leave the town within three days.¹

In some respects the temper of the troops was excellent. In the petty warfare of the past winter they had generally been successful, proving themselves a match for the bushrangers and Indians on their own ground; so that, as Sergeant Johnson remarks, in his odd way, "Very often a small number of our men would put to flight a considerable party of those Cannibals." They began to think themselves invincible; yet they had the deepest cause for anxiety. The effective strength of the garrison was reduced to less than half, and of those that remained fit for duty, hardly a man was entirely free from scurvy. The rank and file had no fresh provisions; and, in spite of every precaution, this malignant disease, aided by fever and dysentery, made no less havoc among them than among the crews of Jacques Cartier at this same place two centuries before. Of about seven thousand men left at Quebec in the autumn, scarcely more than three thousand were fit for duty on the twenty-fourth of April.¹ About seven hundred had found temporary burial in the snow-drifts, as the frozen ground was impenetrable as a rock.

¹ Ordonnance faite à Québec le 21 Avril, 1760, par son Excellence, Jacques Murray.

Meanwhile Vaudreuil was still at Montreal, where he says that he "arrived just in time to take the most judicious measures and prevent General Amherst from penetrating into the colony."² During the winter some of the French regulars were kept in garrison at the outposts, and the rest quartered on the inhabitants; while the Canadians were dismissed to their homes, subject to be mustered again at the call of the Governor. Both he and Lévis were full of the hope of retaking Quebec. He had spies and agents among Murray's soldiers; and though the citizens had sworn allegiance to King George, some of them were exceedingly useful to his enemies. Vaudreuil had constant information of the state of the garrison. He knew that the scurvy was his active and powerful ally, and that the hospitals and houses of Quebec were crowded with the sick. At the end of March he was informed that more than half the British were on the sick-list; and it was presently rumored that Murray had only two thousand men able to bear arms.¹ With every allowance for exaggeration in these reports, it was plain that the French could attack their invaders in overwhelming force.

¹ Return of the present State of His Majesty's Forces in Garrison at Quebec, 24 April, 1760 (Public Record Office).

² Vaudreuil au Ministre, 30 Oct. 1759.

The difficulty was to find means of transportation. The depth of the snow and the want of draught animals made it necessary to wait till the river should become navigable; but preparation was begun at once. Lévis was the soul of the enterprise. Provisions were gathered from far and near; cannon, mortars, and munitions of war were brought from the frontier posts, and butcher-knives were fitted to the muzzles of guns to serve the Canadians in place of bayonets. All the workmen about Montreal were busied in making tools and gun-carriages. Stores were impressed from the merchants; and certain articles, which could not otherwise be had, were smuggled, with extraordinary address, out of Quebec itself.¹ Early in spring the militia received orders to muster for the march. There were doubts and discontent; but, says a contemporary, "sensible people dared not speak, for if they did they were set down as English." Some there were who in secret called the scheme "Lévis' folly;" yet it was perfectly rational, well conceived, and conducted with vigor and skill. Two frigates, two sloops-of-war, and a number of smaller craft still remained in the river, under command of Vauquelin, the brave officer who had distinguished himself at the siege of Louisbourg. The stores and cannon were placed on board these vessels, the army embarked in a fleet of bateaux, and on the twentieth of April the whole set out together for the scene of action. They comprised eight battalions of troops of the line and two of colony troops; with the colonial artillery, three thousand Canadians, and four hundred Indians. When they left Montreal, their effective strength, besides Indians, is said by Lévis to have been six thousand nine hundred and ten, a number which was increased as he advanced by the garrisons of Jacques-Cartier, Déschambault, and Pointe-aux-Trembles, as well as by the Canadians on both sides of the St. Lawrence below Three Rivers; for Vaudreuil had ordered the militia captains to join his standard, with all their followers, armed and equipped, on pain of death.²

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 15 Avril, 1760.

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 23 Avril, 1760.

² Vaudreuil aux Capitaines de Milice, 16 Avril, 1760. I am indebted to Abbé H. R. Casgrain for a copy of this letter.

These accessions appear to have raised his force to between eight and nine thousand.

The ice still clung to the river banks, the weather was bad, and the navigation difficult; but on the twenty-sixth the army landed at St. Augustin, crossed the river of Cap-Rouge on bridges of their own making, and moved upon the English outpost at Old Lorette. The English abandoned it and fell back to Ste.-Foy. Lévis followed. Night came on, with a gale from the southeast, a driving rain, and violent thunder, unusual at that season. The road, a bad and broken one, led through the marsh called La Suède. Causeways and bridges broke down under the weight of the marching columns and plunged the men into water, mud, and half-thawed ice. "It was a frightful night," says Lévis; "so dark that but for the flashes of lightning we should have been forced to stop." The break of day found the vanguard at the edge of the woods bordering the farther side of the marsh. The storm had abated; and they saw before them, a few hundred yards distant, through the misty air, a ridge of rising ground on which stood the parish church of Ste.-Foy, with a row of Canadian houses stretching far to right and left. This ridge was the declivity of the plateau of Quebec; the same which as it approaches the town, some five or six miles towards the left, takes the names of Côte d'Abraham and Côte Ste.-Geneviève. The church and the houses were occupied by British troops, who, as the French debouched from the woods, opened on them with cannon, and compelled them to fall back. Though the ridge at this point is not steep, the position was a strong one; but had Lévis known how few were as yet there to oppose him, he might have carried it by an assault in front. As it was, he resolved to wait till night, and then flank the enemy by a march to the right along the border of the wood.

It was the morning of Sunday, the twenty-seventh. Till late in the night before, Murray and the garrison of Quebec were unaware of the immediate danger; and they learned it at last through a singular stroke of fortune. Some time after midnight the watch on board the frigate "Racehorse," which had wintered in the dock at the Lower Town, heard a feeble cry of distress from the midst of the darkness that covered the St. Lawrence. Captain Macartney was at once informed of it; and, through an impulse of humanity, he ordered a boat to put out amid the drifting ice that was sweeping up the river with the tide. Guided by the faint cries, the sailors found a man lying on a large cake of ice, drenched, and half dead with cold; and, taking him with difficulty into their boat, they carried him to the ship. It was long before he was able to speak intelligibly; but at last, being revived by cordials and other remedies, he found strength to tell his benefactors that he was a sergeant of artillery in the army that had come to retake Quebec; that in trying to land a little above Cap-Rouge, his boat had been upset, his companions drowned, and he himself saved by climbing upon the cake of ice where they had discovered him ; that he had been borne by the ebb tide down to the Island of Orleans, and then brought up to Quebec by the flow ; and, finally, that Lévis was marching on the town with twelve thousand men at his back.

He was placed in a hammock and carried up Mountain Street to the quarters of the General, who was roused from sleep at three o'clock in the morning to hear his story. The troops were ordered under arms ; and soon after daybreak Murray marched out with ten pieces of cannon and more than half the garrison. His principal object was to withdraw the advanced posts at Ste.-Foy, Cap-Rouge, Sillery, and Anse du Foulon. The storm had turned to a cold, drizzling rain, and the men, as they dragged their cannon through snow and mud, were soon drenched to the skin. On reaching Ste.-Foy, they opened a brisk fire from the heights upon the woods which now covered the whole army of Lévis ; and being rejoined by the various outposts, returned to Quebec in the afternoon, after blowing up the church, which contained a store of munitions that they had no means of bringing off. When they entered Quebec a gill of rum was served out to each man ; several houses in the suburb of St. Roch were torn down to supply them with firewood for drying their clothes ; and they were left to take what rest they could against the morrow. The French, meanwhile, took possession of the abandoned heights ; and while some filled the houses, barns, and sheds of Ste.-Foy and its neighborhood, others, chiefly Canadians, crossed the plateau to seek shelter in the village of Sillery.

Three courses were open to Murray. He could defend Quebec, fortify himself outside the walls on the Buttes-à-Neveu, or fight Lévis at all risks. The walls of Quebec could not withstand a cannonade, and he had long intended to intrench his army on the Buttes, as a better position of defence; but the ground, frozen like a rock, had thus far made the plan impracticable. Even now, though the surface was thawed, the soil beneath was still frost-bound, making the task of fortification extremely difficult, if indeed the French would give him time for it. Murray was young in years, and younger still in impulse. He was ardent, fearless, ambitious, and emulous of the fame of Wolfe. "The enemy," he soon after wrote to Pitt, "was greatly superior in number, it is true; but when I considered that our little army was in the habit of beating that enemy, and had a very fine train of field artillery; that shutting ourselves at once within the walls was putting all upon the single chance of holding out for a considerable time a wretched fortification, I resolved to give them battle; and, half an hour after six in the morning, we marched with all the force I could muster, namely, three thousand men."¹ Some of these had left the hospitals of their own accord in their eagerness to take part in the fray.

The rain had ceased; but as the column emerged from St. Louis Gate, the scene before them was a dismal one. As yet there was no sign of spring. Each leafless bush and tree was dark with clammy moisture; patches of bare earth lay oozy and black on the southern slopes: but elsewhere the ground was still covered with snow, in some places piled in drifts, and everywhere sodden with rain; while each hollow and depression was full of that half-liquid, lead-colored mixture of snow and water which New England schoolboys call "slush," for all drainage was stopped by the frozen subsoil. The troops had with them two howitzers and twenty field-pieces, which had been captured when Quebec surrendered, and had formed a part of that very battery which Ramesay refused to Montcalm at the battle of the autumn before. As there were no horses, the cannon were dragged by some of the soldiers, while others carried picks and spades; for as yet Murray seems not to have made up his mind whether to fortify or fight. Thus they advanced nearly half a mile; till reaching the Buttes-à-Neveu, they formed in order of battle along their farther slopes, on the same ground that Montcalm had occupied on the morning of his death.

¹ Murray to Pitt, 25 May, 1760.

Murray went forward to reconnoitre. Immediately before him was a rising ground, and, beyond it, a tract of forest called Sillery Wood, a mile or more distant. Nearer, on the left, he could see two blockhouses built by the English in the last autumn, not far from the brink of the plateau above the Anse du Foulon where Wolfe climbed the heights. On the right, at the opposite brink of the plateau, was a house and a fortified windmill belonging to one Dumont. The blockhouses, the mill, and the rising ground between them were occupied by the vanguard of Lévis' army; while, behind, he could descry the main body moving along the road from Ste.-Foy, then turning, battalion after battalion, and rapidly marching across the plateau along the edge of Sillery Wood. The two brigades of the leading column had already reached the blockhouses by the Anse du Foulon, and formed themselves as the right wing of the French line of battle; but those behind were not yet in position.

Murray, kindling at the sight, thought that so favorable a moment was not to be lost, and ordered an advance. His line consisted of eight battalions, numbering a little above two thousand. In the intervals between them the cannon were dragged through slush and mud by five hundred men; and, at a little distance behind, the remaining two battalions followed as a reserve. The right flank was covered by Dalling's light infantry; the left by Hazen's company of rangers and a hundred volunteers under Major MacDonald. They all moved forward till they were on nearly the same ground where Wolfe's army had been drawn up. Then the cannon unlimbered, and opened on the French with such effect that Lévis, who was on horseback in the middle of the field, sent orders to the corps of his left to fall back to the cover of the woods. The movement caused some disorder. Murray mistook it for retreat, and commanded a farther advance. The whole British line, extending itself towards the right, pushed eagerly forward: in doing which it lost the advantage of the favorable position it had occupied; and the battalions of the right soon found themselves on low grounds, wading in half-melted snow, which in some parts was knee deep. Here the cannon could no longer be worked with effect. Just in front, a small brook ran along the hollow, through soft mud and saturated snow-drifts, then gurgled down the slope on the right, to lose itself in the meadows of the St. Charles. A few rods before this brook stood the house and windmill of Dumont, occupied by five companies of French grenadiers. The light infantry at once attacked them. A furious struggle ensued, till at length the French gave way, and the victors dashed forward to follow up their advantage. Their ardor cost them dear. The corps on the French left, which had fallen back into the woods, now advanced again as the cannon ceased to play, rushing on without order but with the utmost impetuosity, led by a gallant old officer, Colonel Dalquier, of the battalion of Béarn. A bullet in the body could not stop him. The light infantry were overwhelmed; and such of them as were left alive were driven back in confusion upon the battalions behind them, along the front of which they remained dispersed for some minutes, preventing the troops from firing on the advancing French, who thus had time to reform their ranks. At length the light infantry got themselves out of the way and retired to the rear, where, having lost nearly all their officers, they remained during the rest of the fight. Another struggle followed for the house and mill of Dumont, of which the French again got possession, to be again driven out; and it remained, as if by mutual consent, unoccupied for some time by either party. For above an hour more the fight was hot and fierce. "We drove them back as long as we had ammunition for our cannon," says Sergeant Johnson; but now it failed, and no more was to be had, because, in the eccentric phrase of the sergeant, the tumbrils were "bogged in deep pits of snow."

While this was passing on the English right, it fared still worse with them on the left. The advance of the line was no less disastrous here than there. It brought the troops close to the woods which circled round to this point from the French rear, and from which the Canadians, covered by the trees, now poured on them a deadly fire. Here, as on the right, Lévis had ordered his troops to fall back for a time; but when the fire of the English cannon ceased, they advanced again, and their artillery, though consisting of only three pieces, played its part with good effect. Hazen's rangers and MacDonald's volunteers attacked and took the two adjacent blockhouses, but could not hold them. Hazen was wounded, MacDonald killed, and their party overpowered. The British battalions held their ground till the French, whose superior numbers enabled them to extend themselves on both sides beyond the English line, made a furious attack on the left wing, in front and flank. The reserves were ordered up, and the troops stood for a time in sullen desperation under the storm of bullets ; but they were dropping fast in the blood-stained snow, and the order came at length to fall back. They obeyed with curses : “ Damn it, what is falling back but retreating ? ” ¹ The right wing, also out-flanked, followed the example of the left. Some of the corps tried to drag off their cannon ; but being prevented by the deep mud and snow they spiked the pieces and abandoned them. The French followed close, hoping to cut off the fugitives from the gates of Quebec ; till Lévis, seeing that the retreat, though precipitate, was not entirely without order, thought best to stop the pursuit.

The fight lasted about two hours, and did credit to both sides. The Canadians not only showed their usual address and courage when under cover of woods, but they also fought well in the open field ; and the conduct of the whole French force proved how completely they had recovered from the panic of the last autumn. From the first they were greatly superior in number, and at the middle and end of the affair, when they had all reached the field, they were more than two against one.² The English, on the other hand, besides the opportunity of attacking before their enemies had completely formed, had a vastly superior artillery and a favorable position, both which advantages they lost after their second advance.

Some curious anecdotes are told of the retreat. Colonel Fraser, of the Highlanders, received a bullet

¹ Knox, II. 295.

² See Appendix K.

which was no doubt half spent, and which, with excellent precision, hit the base of his queue, so deadening the shock that it gave him no other inconvenience than a stiff neck. Captain Hazen, of the rangers, badly wounded, was making his way towards the gate, supported by his servant, when he saw at a great distance a French officer leading a file of men across a rising ground; whereupon he stopped and told the servant to give him his gun. A volunteer named Thompson, who was near by and who tells the story, thought that he was out of his senses; but Hazen persisted, seated himself on the ground, took a long aim, fired, and brought down his man. Thompson congratulated him. "A chance shot may kill the devil," replied Hazen; and resigning himself again to the arms of his attendant, he reached the town, recovered from his wound, and lived to be a general of the Revolution.¹

The English lost above a thousand, or more than a third of their whole number, killed, wounded, and missing.² They carried off some of their wounded, but left others behind; and the greater part of these were murdered, scalped, and mangled by the Indians, all of whom were converts from the mission villages. English writers put the French loss at two thousand and upwards, which is no doubt a gross exaggeration. Lévis declares that the number did not exceed six or eight hundred; but afterwards gives a list which makes it eight hundred and thirty-three.

¹ Thompson, deceived by Hazen's baptismal name, Moses, thought that he was a Jew. (Revue Canadienne, IV. 865.) He was, however, of an old New England Puritan family. See the Hazen genealogy in Historic-Genealogical Register, XXXIII.

² Return of Killed, Wounded, and Missing, signed J. Murray.

Murray had left three or four hundred men to guard Quebec when the rest marched out; and adding them to those who had returned scathless from the fight, he now had about twenty-four hundred rank and file fit for duty. Yet even the troops that were rated as effective were in so bad a condition that the hyperbolical Sergeant Johnson calls them "half-starved, scorbutic skeletons." That worthy soldier, commonly a model of dutiful respect to those above him, this time so far forgets himself as to criticise his general for the "mad, enthusiastic zeal" by which he nearly lost the fruits of Wolfe's victory. In fact, the fate of Quebec trembled in the balance. "We were too few and weak to stand an assault," continues Johnson, "and we were almost in as deep a distress as we could be." At first there was some drunkenness and some plundering of private houses; but Murray stopped the one by staving the rum-barrels of the sutlers, and the other by hanging the chief offender. Within three days order, subordination, hope, and almost confidence were completely restored. Not a man was idle. The troops left their barracks and lay in tents close to their respective alarm posts. On the open space by St. Louis Gate a crowd of convalescents were busy in filling sand-bags to strengthen the defences, while the sick and wounded in the hospitals made wadding for the cannon. The ramparts were faced with fascines, of which a large stock had been provided in the autumn; chevaux-de-frise were planted in exposed places; an outwork was built to protect St. Louis Gate; embrasures were cut along the whole length of the walls; and the French cannon captured when the town was taken were planted against their late owners. Every man was tasked to the utmost of his strength; and the garrison, gaunt, worn, besmirched with mud, looked less like soldiers than like overworked laborers.

The conduct of the officers troubled the spirit of Sergeant Johnson. It shocked his sense of the fitness of things to see them sharing the hard work of the private men, and he thus gives utterance to his feelings: "None but those who were present on the spot can imagine the grief of heart the soldiers felt to see their officers yoked in the harness, dragging up cannon from the Lower Town; to see gentlemen, who were set over them by His Majesty to command and keep them to their duty, working at the batteries with the barrow, pickaxe, and spade." The effect, however, was admirable. The spirit of the men rose to the crisis. Murray, no less than his officers, had all their confidence; for if he had fallen into a fatal error, he atoned for it now by unconquerable resolution and exhaustless fertility of resource. Deserters said that Lévis would assault the town; and the soldiers replied: "Let him come on; he will catch a Tartar."

Lévis and his army were no less busy in digging trenches along the stony back of the Buttes-à-Neveu. Every day the English fire grew hotter; till at last nearly a hundred and fifty cannon vomited iron upon them from the walls of Quebec, and May was well advanced before they could plant a single gun to reply. Their vessels had landed artillery at the Anse du Foulon; but their best hope lay in the succors they daily expected from the river below. In the autumn Lévis, with a view to his intended enterprise, had sent a request to Versailles that a ship laden with munitions and heavy siege-guns should be sent from France in time to meet him at Quebec in April; while he looked also for another ship, which had wintered at Gaspé, and which therefore might reach him as soon as navigation opened. The arrival of these vessels would have made the position of the English doubly critical; and, on the other hand, should an English squadron appear first, Lévis would be forced to raise the siege. Thus each side watched the river with an anxiety that grew constantly more intense; and the English presently descried signals along the shore which seemed to say that French ships were moving up the St. Lawrence. Meantime, while doing their best to compass each other's destruction, neither side forgot the courtesies of war. Lévis heard that Murray liked spruce-beer for his table, and sent him a flag of truce with a quantity of spruce-boughs and a message of compliment; Murray responded with a Cheshire cheese, and Lévis rejoined with a present of partridges.

Bad and scanty fare, excessive toil, and broken sleep were telling ominously on the strength of the garrison when, on the ninth of May, Murray, as he sat pondering over the fire at his quarters in St. Louis Street, was interrupted by an officer who came to tell him that there was a ship-of-war in the Basin beating up towards the town. Murray started from his revery, and directed that British colors should be raised immediately on Cape Diamond.¹ The halyards being out of order, a sailor climbed the staff and drew up the flag to its place. The news had spread; men and officers, divided between hope and fear, crowded to the rampart by the Château, where Durham Terrace now overlooks the St. Lawrence, and every eye was strained on the approaching ship, eager to see whether she would show the red flag of England or the white one of France. Slowly her colors rose to the mast-head and unfurled to the wind the red cross of St. George. It was the British frigate "Lowestoffe." She anchored before the Lower Town, and saluted the garrison with twenty-one guns. "The gladness of the troops," says Knox, "is not to be expressed. Both officers and soldiers mounted the parapet in the face of the enemy and huzzaed with their hats in the air for almost an hour. The garrison, the enemy's camp, the bay, and circumjacent country resounded with our shouts and the thunder of our artillery; for the gunners were so elated that they did nothing but load and fire for a considerable time. In short, the general satisfaction is not to be conceived, except by a person who had suffered the extremities of a siege, and been destined, with his brave friends and countrymen, to the scalping-knives of a faithless conqueror and his barbarous allies." The "Lowestoffe" brought news that a British squadron was at the mouth of the St. Lawrence, and would reach Quebec in a few days.

¹ Thompson in Revue Canadienne, IV. 866.

Lévis, in ignorance of this, still clung to the hope that French ships would arrive strong enough to overpower the unwelcome stranger. His guns, being at last in position, presently opened fire upon a wall that was not built to bear the brunt of heavy shot; but an artillery better and more numerous than his own almost silenced them, and his gunners were harassed by repeated sallies. The besiegers had now no real chance of success unless they could carry the place by storm, to which end they had provided abundant scaling-ladders as well as petards to burst in the gates. They made, however, no attempt to use them. A week passed, when, on the evening of the fifteenth, the ship of the line "Vanguard" and the frigate "Diana" sailed into the harbor; and on the next morning the "Diana" and the "Lowestoffe" passed the town to attack the French vessels in the river above. These were six in all, — two frigates, two smaller armed ships, and two schooners; the whole under command of the gallant Vauquelin. He did not belie his reputation; fought his ship with persistent bravery till his ammunition was spent, refused even then to strike his flag, and being made prisoner, was treated by his captors with distinguished honor. The other vessels made little or no resistance. One of them threw her guns overboard and escaped; the rest ran ashore and were burned.

The destruction of his vessels was a death-blow to the hopes of Lévis, for they contained his stores of food and ammunition. He had passed the preceding night in great agitation; and when the cannonade on the river ceased, he hastened to raise the siege. In the evening deserters from his camp told Murray that the French were in full retreat; on which all the English batteries opened, firing at random through the darkness, and sending cannon-balls en ricochet, bowling by scores together, over the Plains of Abraham on the heels of the retiring enemy. Murray marched out at dawn of day to fall upon their rear; but, with a hundred and fifty cannon bellowing behind them, they had made such speed that, though he pushed over the marsh to Old Lorette, he could not overtake them; they had already crossed the river of Cap-Rouge. Why, with numbers still superior, they went off in such haste, it is hard to say. They left behind them thirty-four cannon and six mortars, with petards, scaling-ladders, tents, ammunition, baggage, intrenching tools, many of their muskets, and all their sick and wounded.

The effort to recover Quebec did great honor to the enterprise of the French; but it availed them nothing, served only to waste resources that seemed already at the lowest ebb, and gave fresh opportunity of plunder to Cadet and his crew, who failed not to make use of it.

After the battle of Ste.-Foy Murray sent the frigate "Racehorse" to Halifax with news of his defeat, and from Halifax it was sent to England. The British public were taken by surprise. "Who the deuce was thinking of Quebec?" says Horace Walpole. "America was like a book one has read and done with; but here we are on a sudden reading our book backwards." Ten days passed, and then came word that the siege was raised and that the French were gone; upon which Walpole wrote to General Conway: "Well, Quebec is come to life again. Last night I went to see the Holdernesses. I met my Lady in a triumphal car, drawn by a Manx horse, thirteen little fingers high, with Lady Emily. Mr. Milbank was walking by himself in ovation after the car, and they were going to see the bonfire at the alehouse at the corner. The whole procession returned with me; and from the Countess's dressing-room we saw a battery fired before the house, the mob crying, 'God bless the good news!' These are all the particulars I know of the siege. My Lord would have showed me the journal; but we amused ourselves much better in going to eat peaches from the new Dutch stoves [hot-houses]."

NOTE.—On the battle of Ste.-Foy and the subsequent siege, L  vis, Guerre du Canada. Relation de la seconde Bataille de Qu  bec et du Si  ge de cette Ville (there are several copies of this paper, with different titles and some variation). Murray to Amherst, 30 April, 1760. Murray, Journal kept at Quebec from Sept. 18, 1759, to May 17, 1760 (Public Record Office, America and West Indies, XCIX.). Murray to Pitt, 25 May, 1760. Letter from an Officer of the Royal Americans at Quebec, 24 May, 1760 (in London Magazine and several periodical papers of the time). Fraser, Journal (Quebec Hist. Soc.); Johnstone, Campaign of 1760 (Ibid.). Relation de ce qui s'est passé au Siège de Québec, par une Religieuse de l'Hôpital Général (Ibid.). Memoirs of the Siege of Quebec, by Sergeant John Johnson. Mémoires sur le Canada, 1749-1760. Letters of Lévis, Bourlamaque, and Vaudreuil, May, June, 1760. Several letters from officers at Quebec in provincial newspapers. Knox, II. 292-322. Plan of the Battle and Situation of the British and French on the Heights of Abraham, the 28th of April, 1760,—an admirable plan, attached to the great plan of operations at Quebec before mentioned, and necessary to an understanding of the position and movements of the two armies (British Museum, King's Maps).

The narratives of Mante, Entick, Wynne, Smith, and other secondary writers give no additional light. On the force engaged on each side, see Appendix K.

CHAPTER XXX.

1760.

FALL OF CANADA.

DESPERATE SITUATION. — EFFORTS OF VAUDREUIL AND LÉVIS. — PLANS OF AMHERST. — A TRIPLE ATTACK. — ADVANCE OF MURRAY. — ADVANCE OF HAVILAND. — ADVANCE OF AMHERST. — CAPITULATION OF MONTREAL. — PROTEST OF LÉVIS. — INJUSTICE OF LOUIS XV. — JOY IN THE BRITISH COLONIES. — CHARACTER OF THE WAR.

THE retreat of Lévis left Canada little hope but in a speedy peace. This hope was strong, for a belief widely prevailed that, even if the colony should be subdued, it would be restored to France by treaty. Its available force did not exceed eight or ten thousand men, as most of the Canadians below the district of Three Rivers had sworn allegiance to King George; and though many of them had disregarded the oath to join the standard of Lévis, they could venture to do so no longer. The French had lost the best of their artillery, their gunpowder was falling short, their provisions would barely carry them to harvest time, and no more was to be hoped for, since a convoy of ships which had sailed from France at the end of winter, laden with supplies of all kinds, had been captured by the English. The blockade of the St. Lawrence was complete. The Western Indians would not fight, and even those of the mission villages were wavering and insolent.

Yet Vaudreuil and Lévis exerted themselves for defence with an energy that does honor to them both. "Far from showing the least timidity," says the ever-modest Governor, "I have taken positions such as may hide our weakness from the enemy."¹ He stationed Rochbeaucourt with three hundred men at Pointe-aux-Trembles; Repentigny with two hundred at Jacques-Cartier; and Dumas with twelve hundred at Deschambault to watch the St. Lawrence and, if possible, prevent Murray from moving up the river. Bougainville was stationed at Isle-aux-Noix to bar the approach from Lake Champlain, and a force under La Corne was held ready to defend the rapids above Montreal, should the English attempt that dangerous passage. Prisoners taken by war parties near Crown Point gave exaggerated reports of hostile preparation, and doubled and trebled the forces that were mustering against Canada.

These forces were nevertheless considerable. Amherst had resolved to enter the colony by all its three gates at once, and, advancing from east, west, and south, unite at Montreal and crush it as in the jaws of a vice. Murray was to ascend the St. Lawrence from Quebec, while Brigadier Haviland forced an entrance by way of Lake Champlain, and Amherst himself led the main army down the St. Lawrence from Lake Ontario. This last route was long, circuitous, difficult, and full of danger from the rapids that obstructed the river. His choice of it for his chief line of operation, instead of the shorter and easier way of Lake Champlain, was meant, no doubt, to prevent the French army from escaping up the Lakes to Detroit and the other wilderness posts, where it might have protracted the war for an indefinite time; while the plan adopted, if successful, would make its capture certain. The plan was a critical one. Three armies advancing from three different points, hundreds of miles apart, by routes full of difficulty, and with no possibility of intercommunication, were to meet at the same place at the same time, or, failing to do so, run the risk of being destroyed in detail. If the French troops could be kept together, and if the small army of Murray or of Haviland should reach Montreal a few days before the co-operating forces appeared, it might be separately attacked and overpowered. In this lay the hope of Vaudreuil and Lévis.¹

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 22 Juin, 1760.

After the siege of Quebec was raised, Murray had an effective force of about twenty-five hundred rank and file.² As the spring opened the invalids were encamped on the Island of Orleans, where fresh air, fresh provisions, and the change from the pestiferous town hospitals wrought such wonders on the scorbutic patients, that in a few weeks a considerable number of them were again fit for garrison duty, if not for the field.

¹ Lévis à Bourlamaque, Juillet, Août, 1760.

² Return of the Present State of His Majesty's Forces in Garrison at Quebec, 21 May, 1760.

Thus it happened that on the second of July twenty-four hundred and fifty men and officers received orders to embark for Montreal; and on the fifteenth they set sail, in thirty-two vessels, with a number of boats and bateaux.¹ They were followed some time after by Lord Rollo, with thirteen hundred additional men just arrived from Louisbourg, the King having ordered that fortress to be abandoned and dismantled. They advanced slowly, landing from time to time, skirmishing with detachments of the enemy who followed them along the shore, or more frequently trading with the farmers who brought them vegetables, poultry, eggs, and fresh meat. They passed the fortified hill of Jacques-Cartier, whence they were saluted with shot and shell, stopped at various parishes, disarmed the inhabitants, administered oaths of neutrality, which were taken without much apparent reluctance, and on the fourth of August came within sight of Three Rivers, then occupied by a body of troops expecting an attack. "But," says Knox, "a delay here would be absurd, as that wretched place must share the fate of Montreal. Our fleet sailed this morning. The French troops, apparently about two thousand, lined their different works, and were in general clothed as regulars, except a very few Canadians and about fifty naked Picts or savages, their bodies being painted of a reddish color and their faces of different colors, which I plainly discerned with my glass. Their light cavalry, who paraded along shore, seemed to be well appointed, clothed in blue, faced with scarlet; but their officers had white uniforms. In fine, their troops, batteries, fair-looking houses; their situation on the banks of a delightful river; our fleet sailing triumphantly before them, with our floating batteries drawn up in line of battle; the country on both sides interspersed with neat settlements, together with the verdure of the fields and trees and the clear, pleasant weather, afforded as agreeable a prospect as the most lively imagination can conceive."

¹ Knox, II. 344, 348.

This excellent lover of the picturesque was still more delighted as the fleet sailed among the islands of St. Peter. "I think nothing could equal the beauties of our navigation this morning: the meandering course of the narrow channel; the awfulness and solemnity of the dark forests with which these islands are covered; the fragrancy of the spontaneous fruits, shrubs, and flowers; the verdure of the water by the reflection of the neighboring woods; the wild chirping notes of the feathered inhabitants; the masts and sails of ships appearing as if among the trees, both ahead and astern: formed altogether an enchanting diversity."

The evening recalled him from dreams to realities; for towards seven o'clock they reached the village of Sorel, where they found a large body of troops and militia intrenched along the strand. Bourlamaque was in command here with two or three thousand men, and Dumas, with another body, was on the northern shore. Both had orders to keep abreast of the fleet as it advanced; and thus French and English alike drew slowly towards Montreal, where lay the main French force under Lévis, ready to unite with Bourlamaque and Dumas, and fall upon Murray at the first opportunity. Montreal was now but a few leagues distant, and the situation was becoming delicate. Murray sent five rangers towards Lake Champlain to get news of Haviland, and took measures at the same time to cause the desertion of the Canadians, who formed the largest part of the opposing force. He sent a proclamation among the parishes, advising the inhabitants to remain peacefully at home, promising that those who did so should be safe in person and property, and threatening to burn every house from which the men of the family were absent. These were not idle words. A detachment sent for the purpose destroyed a settlement near Sorel, the owners of which were in arms under Bourlamaque. "I was under the cruel necessity of burning the greatest part of these poor unhappy people's houses," wrote Murray. "I pray God this example may suffice, for my nature revolts when this becomes a necessary part of my duty."¹ On the other hand, he treated with great kindness all who left the army and returned to their families. The effect was soon felt. The Canadians came in by scores and by hundreds to give up their arms and take the oath of neutrality, till, before the end of August, half Bourlamaque's force had disappeared. Murray encamped on Isle

¹ Murray to Pitt, 24 Aug. 1760.

Ste.-Thérèse, just below Montreal, and watched and waited for Haviland and Amherst to appear.¹

Vaudreuil on his part was not idle. He sent a counter-proclamation through the parishes as an antidote to that of Murray. "I have been compelled," he writes to the Minister, "to decree the pain of death to the Canadians who are so dastardly as to desert or give up their arms to the enemy, and to order that the houses of those who do not join our army shall be burned."² Execution was to be summary, without court-martial.³ Yet desertion increased daily. The Canadians felt themselves doubly ruined, for it became known that the Court had refused to redeem the paper that formed the whole currency of the colony; and, in their desperation, they preferred to trust the tried clemency of the enemy rather than exasperate him by persisting in a vain defence. Vaudreuil writes in his usual strain: "I am taking the most just measures to unite our forces, and, if our situation permits, fight a battle, or several battles. It is to be feared that we shall go down before an enemy so numerous and strong; but, whatever may be the event, we will save the honor of the King's arms. I have the honor to repeat to you, Monseigneur, that if any resource were left me, whatever the progress the English might make, I would maintain myself in some part of the colony with my remaining troops, after having fought with the greatest obstinacy; but I am absolutely without the least remnant of the necessary means. In these unhappy circumstances I shall continue to use every manœuvre and device to keep the enemy in check; but if we succumb in the battles we shall fight, I shall apply myself to obtaining a capitulation which may avert the total ruin of a people who will remain forever French, and who could not survive their misfortunes but for the hope of being restored by the treaty of peace to the rule of His Most Christian Majesty. It is with this view that I shall remain in this town, the Chevalier de Lévis having represented to me that it would be an evil to the colonists past remedy if any accident should happen to me." Lévis was willing to go very far in soothing the susceptibilities of the Governor; but it may be suspected this time that he thought him more useful within four walls than in the open field.

¹ Knox, II. 382, 384. Mante, 340.

² Vaudreuil au Ministre, 29 Août, 1760.

³ Lévis à Bourlamaque, 25 Août, 1760.

There seemed good hope of stopping the advance of Haviland. To this end Vaudreuil had stationed Bougainville at Isle-aux-Noix with seventeen hundred men, and Roquemaure at St. John, a few miles distant, with twelve or fifteen hundred more, besides all the Indians.¹ Haviland embarked at Crown Point with thirty-four hundred regulars, provincials, and Indians.² Four days brought him to Isle-aux-Noix; he landed, planted cannon in the swamp, and opened fire. Major Darby with the light infantry, and Rogers with the rangers, dragged three light pieces through the forest, and planted them on the river-bank in the rear of Bougainville's position, where lay the French naval force, consisting of three armed vessels and several gunboats. The cannon were turned upon the principal ship; a shot cut her cable, and a strong west wind drove her ashore into the hands of her enemies. The other vessels and gunboats made all sail for St. John, but stranded in a bend of the river, where the rangers, swimming out with their tomahawks, boarded and took one of them, and the rest soon surrendered. It was a fatal blow to Bougainville, whose communications with St. John were now cut off. In accordance with instructions from Vaudreuil, he abandoned the island on the night of the twenty-seventh of August, and, making his way with infinite difficulty through the dark forest, joined Roquemaure at St. John, twelve miles below. Haviland followed, the rangers leading the way. Bougainville and Roquemaure fell back, abandoned St. John and Chambly, and joined Bourlamaque on the banks of the St. Lawrence, where the united force at first outnumbered that of Haviland, though fast melted away by discouragement and desertion. Haviland opened communication with Murray, and they both looked daily for the arrival of Amherst, whose approach was rumored by prisoners and deserters.¹

¹ Vaudreuil au Ministre, 29 Août, 1760.

² A List of the Forces employed in the Expedition against Canada, 1760. Compare Mante, 340, Knox, II. 392, and Rogers, 188. Chevalier Johnstone, who was with Bougainville, says "about four thousand," which Vaudreuil multiplies to twelve thousand.

¹ Rogers, Journals. Diary of a Sergeant in the Army of Haviland. Johnstone, Campaign of 1760. Bigot au Ministre, 29 Août, 1760.

The army of Amherst had gathered at Oswego in July. On the tenth of August it was all afloat on Lake Ontario, to the number of ten thousand one hundred and forty-two men, besides about seven hundred Indians under Sir William Johnson.¹ Before the fifteenth the whole had reached La Présentation, otherwise called Oswegatchie or La Galette, the seat of Father Piquet's mission. Near by was a French armed brig, the "Ottawa," with ten cannon and a hundred men, threatening destruction to Amherst's bateaux and whaleboats. Five gunboats attacked and captured her. Then the army advanced again, and were presently joined by two armed vessels of their own which had lingered behind, bewildered among the channels of the Thousand Islands.

Near the head of the rapids, a little below La Galette, stood Fort Lévis, built the year before on an islet in mid-channel. Amherst might have passed its batteries with slight loss, continuing his voyage without paying it the honor of a siege; and this was what the French commanders feared that he would do. "We shall be fortunate," Lévis wrote to Bourlamaque, "if the enemy amuse themselves with capturing it. My chief anxiety is lest Amherst should reach Montreal so soon that we may not have time to unite our forces to attack Haviland or Murray." If he had better known the English commander, Lévis would have seen that he was not the man to leave a post of the enemy in his rear under any circumstances; and Amherst had also another reason for wishing to get the garrison into his hands, for he expected to find among them the pilots whom he needed to guide his boats down the rapids. He therefore invested the fort, and, on the twenty-third, cannonaded it from his vessels, the mainland, and the neighboring islands. It was commanded by Pouchot, the late commandant of Niagara, made prisoner in the last campaign, and since exchanged. As the rocky islet had but little earth, the defences, though thick and strong, were chiefly of logs, which flew in splinters under the bombardment. The French, however, made a brave resistance. The firing lasted all day, was resumed in the morning, and continued two days more; when Pouchot, whose works were in ruins, surrendered himself and his garrison. On this, Johnson's Indians prepared to kill the prisoners; and, being compelled to desist, three fourths of them went home in a rage.¹

¹ A List of the Forces employed in the Expedition against Canada. Compare Mante, 301, and Knox, II. 403.

Now began the critical part of the expedition, the descent of the rapids. The Galops, the Rapide Plat, the Long Saut, the Côteau du Lac were passed in succession, with little loss, till they reached the Cedars, the Buisson, and the Cascades, where the reckless surges dashed and bounded in the sun, beautiful and terrible as young tigers at play. Boat after boat, borne on their foaming crests, rushed madly down the torrent. Forty-six were totally wrecked, eighteen were damaged, and eighty-four men were drowned.¹ La Corne was watching the rapids with a considerable body of Canadians; and it is difficult to see why this bold and enterprising chief allowed the army to descend undisturbed through passes so dangerous. At length the last rapid was left behind; and the flotilla, gliding in peace over the smooth breast of Lake St. Louis, landed at Isle Perrot, a few leagues from Montreal. In the morning, September sixth, the troops embarked again, landed unopposed at La Chine, nine miles from the city, marched on without delay, and encamped before its walls.

¹ On the capture of Fort Lévis, Amherst to Pitt, 26 Aug. 1760. Amherst to Monckton, same date. Pouchot, II. 264-282. Knox, II. 405-413. Mante, 303-306. All Canada in the Hands of the English (Boston, 1760). Journal of Colonel Nathaniel Woodhull.

The Montreal of that time was a long, narrow assemblage of wooden or stone houses, one or two stories high, above which rose the peaked towers of the Seminary, the spires of three churches, the walls of four convents, with the trees of their adjacent gardens, and, conspicuous at the lower end, a high mound of earth, crowned by a redoubt, where a few cannon were mounted. The whole was surrounded by a shallow moat and a bastioned stone wall, made for defence against Indians, and incapable of resisting cannon.²

On the morning after Amherst encamped above the place, Murray landed to encamp below it; and ¹ Amherst to Pitt, 8 Sept. 1760.

² An East View of Montreal, drawn on the Spot by Thomas Patten (King's Maps, British Museum), Plan of Montreal, 1759. A Description of Montreal, in several magazines of the time. The recent Canadian publication called Le Vieux Montréal, is exceedingly incorrect as to the numbers of the British troops and the position of their camps.

Vaudreuil, looking across the St. Lawrence, could see the tents of Haviland's little army on the southern shore. Bourtoulamaque, Bougainville, and Roquemare, abandoned by all their militia, had crossed to Montreal with the few regulars that remained with them. The town was crowded with non-combatant refugees. Here, too, was nearly all the remaining force of Canada, consisting of twenty-two hundred troops of the line and some two hundred colony troops; for all the Canadians had by this time gone home. Many of the regulars, especially of the colony troops, had also deserted; and the rest were so broken in discipline that their officers were forced to use entreaties instead of commands. The three armies encamped around the city amounted to seventeen thousand men;¹ Amherst was bringing up his cannon from La Chine, and the town wall would have crumbled before them in an hour.

On the night when Amherst arrived, the Governor called a council of war.² It was resolved that since all the militia and many of the regulars had abandoned the army, and the Indian allies of France had gone over to the enemy, further resistance was impossible. Vaudreuil laid before the assembled officers a long paper that he had drawn up, containing fifty-five articles of capitulation to be proposed to the English ; and these were unanimously approved.¹ In the morning Bougainville carried them to the tent of Amherst. He granted the greater part, modified some, and flatly refused others. That which the French officers thought more important than all the rest was the provision that the troops should march out with arms, cannon, and the honors of war; to which it was replied: "The whole garrison of Montreal and all other French troops in Canada must lay down their arms, and shall not serve during the present war." This demand was felt to be intolerable. The Governor sent Bougainville back to remonstrate ; but Amherst was inflexible. Then Lévis tried to shake his resolution, and sent him an officer with the following note: "I send your Excellency M. de la Pause, Assistant Quartermaster-General of the Army, on the subject of the too rigorous article which you dictate to the troops by the capitulation, to which it would not be possible for us to subscribe." Amherst answered the envoy: "I am fully resolved, for the infamous part the troops of France have acted in exciting the savages to perpetrate the most horrid and unheard of barbarities in the whole progress of the war, and for other open treacheries and flagrant breaches of faith, to manifest to all the world by this capitulation my detestation of such practices;" and he dismissed La Pause with a short note, refusing to change the conditions.

¹ A List of the Forces employed in the Expedition against Canada. See Smith, History of Canada, I. Appendix xix. Vaudreuil writes to Charles Langlade, on the ninth, that the three armies amount to twenty thousand, and raises the number to thirty-two thousand in a letter to the Minister on the next day. Berniers says twenty thousand; Lévis, for obvious reasons, exaggerates the number to forty thousand.

² Vaudreuil au Ministre, 10 Sept. 1760.

¹ Procès-verbal de la Délibération du Conseil de Guerre tenu à Montréal, 6 Sept. 1760.

On the next morning, September eighth, Vaudreuil yielded, and signed the capitulation. By it Canada and all its dependencies passed to the British Crown. French officers, civil and military, with French troops and sailors, were to be sent to France in British ships. Free exercise of religion was assured to the people of the colony, and the religious communities were to retain their possessions, rights, and privileges. All persons who might wish to retire to France were allowed to do so, and the Canadians were to remain in full enjoyment of feudal and other property, including negro and Indian slaves.¹

The greatest alarm had prevailed among the inhabitants lest they should suffer violence from the English Indians, and Vaudreuil had endeavored to provide that these dangerous enemies should be sent back at once to their villages. This was refused, with the remark: "There never have been any cruelties committed by the Indians of our army." Strict precautions were taken at the same time, not only against the few savages whom the firm conduct of Johnson at Fort Lévis had not driven away, but also against the late allies of the French, now become a peril to them. In consequence, not a man, woman, or child was hurt. Amherst, in general orders, expressed his confidence "that the troops will not disgrace themselves by the least appearance of inhumanity, or by any unsoldierlike behavior in seeking for plunder; and that as the Canadians are now become British subjects, they will feel the good effects of His Majesty's protection." They were in fact treated with a kindness that seemed to surprise them.

¹ Articles of Capitulation, 8 Sept. 1760. Amherst to Pitt, same date.

Lévis was so incensed at the demand that the troops should lay down their arms and serve no longer during the war that, before the capitulation was signed, he made a formal protest¹ in his own name and that of the officers from France, and insisted that the negotiation should be broken off. "If," he added, "the Marquis de Vaudreuil, through political motives, thinks himself obliged to surrender the colony at once, we ask his permission to withdraw with the troops of the line to the Island of St. Helen, in order to uphold there, on our own behalf, the honor of the King's arms." The proposal was of course rejected, as Lévis knew that it would be, and he and his officers were ordered to conform to the capitulation. When Vaudreuil reached France, three months after, he had the mortification to receive from the Colonial Minister a letter containing these words: "Though His Majesty was perfectly aware of the state of Canada, nevertheless, after the assurances you had given to make the utmost efforts to sustain the honor of his arms, he did not expect to hear so soon of the surrender of Montreal and the whole colony. But, granting that capitulation was a necessity, his Majesty was not the less surprised and ill pleased at the conditions, so little honorable, to which you submitted, especially after the representations made you by the Chevalier de Lévis.”¹ The brother of Vaudreuil complained to the Minister of the terms of this letter, and the Minister replied: “I see with regret, Monsieur, that you are pained by the letter I wrote your brother; but I could not help telling him what the King did me the honor to say to me; and it would have been unpleasant for him to hear it from anybody else.”²

¹ Protêt de M. de Lévis à M. de Vaudreuil contre la Clause dans les Articles de Capitulation qui exige que les Troupes mettront bas les Armes, avec l'Ordre de M. de Vaudreuil au Chevalier de Lévis de se conformer à la Capitulation proposée. Vaudreuil au Ministre de la Marine, 10 Sept. 1760. Lévis au Ministre de la Guerre, 27 Nov. 1760.

It is true that Vaudreuil had in some measure drawn this reproach upon himself by his boastings about the battles he would fight; yet the royal displeasure was undeserved. The Governor had no choice but to give up the colony; for Amherst had him in his power, and knew that he could exact what terms he pleased. Further resistance could only have ended in surrender at the discretion of the victor, and the protest of Lévis was nothing but a device to save his own reputation and that of his brother officers from France. Vaudreuil had served the King and the colony in some respects with ability, always with an unflagging zeal; and he loved the land of his birth with a jealous devotion that goes far towards redeeming his miserable defects. The King himself, and not the servants whom he abandoned to their fate, was answerable for the loss of New France.

Half the continent had changed hands at the scratch of a pen. Governor Bernard, of Massachusetts, proclaimed a day of thanksgiving for the great event, and the Boston newspapers recount how the occasion was celebrated with a parade of the cadets and other volunteer corps, a grand dinner in Faneuil Hall, music, bonfires, illuminations, firing of cannon, and, above all, by sermons in every church of the province; for the heart of early New England always found voice through her pulpits. Before me lies a bundle of these sermons, rescued from sixscore years of dust, scrawled on their title-pages with names of owners dead long ago, worm-eaten, dingy, stained with the damps of time, and uttering in quaint old letterpress the emotions of a buried and forgotten past. Triumph, gratulation, hope, breathe in every line, but no ill-will against a fallen enemy. Thomas Foxcroft, pastor of the "Old Church in Boston," preaches from the text, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." "Long," he says, "had it been the common opinion, Delenda est Carthago, Canada must be conquered, or we could hope for no lasting quiet in these parts; and now, through the good hand of our God upon us, we see the happy day of its accomplishment. We behold His Majesty's victorious troops treading upon the high places of the enemy, their last fortress delivered up, and their whole country surrendered to the King of Britain in the person of his general, the intrepid, the serene, the successful Amherst."

¹ Le Ministre à Vaudreuil, 5 Déc. 1760.

² Le Ministre au Vicomte de Vaudreuil, Frère du Gouverneur, 21 Déc. 1760.

The loyal John Mellen, pastor of the Second Church in Lancaster, exclaims, boding nothing of the tempest to come : " Let us fear God and honor the King, and be peaceable subjects of an easy and happy government. And may the blessing of Heaven be ever upon those enemies of our country that have now submitted to the English Crown, and according to the oath they have taken lead quiet lives in all godliness and honesty." Then he ventures to predict that America, now thrown open to British colonists, will be peopled in a century and a half with sixty million souls : a prophecy likely to be more than fulfilled.

" God has given us to sing this day the downfall of New France, the North American Babylon, New England's rival," cries Eli Forbes to his congregation of sober farmers and staid matrons at the rustic village of Brookfield. Like many of his flock, he had been to the war, having served two years as chaplain of Ruggles's Massachusetts regiment ; and something of a martial spirit breathes through his discourse. He passes in review the events of each campaign down to their triumphant close. " Thus God was our salvation and our strength ; yet he who directs the great events of war suffered not our joy to be uninterrupted, for we had to lament the fall of the valiant and good General Wolfe, whose death demands a tear from every British eye, a sigh from every Protestant heart. Is he dead ? I recall myself. Such heroes are immortal ; he lives on every loyal tongue ; he lives in every grateful breast ; and charity bids me give him a place among the princes of heaven." Nor does he forget the praises of Amherst, " the renowned general, worthy of that most honorable of all titles, the Christian hero; for he loves his enemies, and while he subdues them he makes them happy. He transplants British liberty to where till now it was unknown. He acts the General, the Briton, the Conqueror, and the Christian. What fair hopes arise from the peaceful and undisturbed enjoyment of this good land, and the blessing of our gracious God with it! Methinks I see towns enlarged, settlements increased, and this howling wilderness become a fruitful field which the Lord hath blessed; and, to complete the scene, I see churches rise and flourish in every Christian grace where has been the seat of Satan and Indian idolatry."

Nathaniel Appleton, of Cambridge, hails the dawning of a new era. "Who can tell what great and glorious things God is about to bring forward in the world, and in this world of America in particular? Oh, may the time come when these deserts, which for ages unknown have been regions of darkness and habitations of cruelty, shall be illuminated with the light of the glorious Gospel, and when this part of the world, which till the later ages was utterly unknown, shall be the glory and joy of the whole earth!"

On the American continent the war was ended, and the British colonists breathed for a space, as they drifted unwittingly towards a deadlier strife. They had learned hard and useful lessons. Their mutual jealousies and disputes, the quarrels of their governors and assemblies, the want of any general military organization, and the absence, in most of them, of military habits, joined to narrow views of their own interest, had unfitted them to the last degree for carrying on offensive war. Nor were the British troops sent for their support remarkable in the beginning for good discipline or efficient command. When hostilities broke out, the army of Great Britain was so small as to be hardly worth the name. A new one had to be created; and thus the inexperienced Shirley and the incompetent Loudon, with the futile Newcastle behind them, had, besides their own incapacity, the disadvantage of raw troops and half-formed officers; while against them stood an enemy who, though weak in numbers, was strong in a centralized military organization, skilful leaders armed with untrammelled and absolute authority, practised soldiers, and a population not only brave, but in good part inured to war.

The nature of the country was another cause that helped to protract the contest. "Geography," says Von Moltke, "is three fourths of military science;" and never was the truth of his words more fully exemplified. Canada was fortified with vast outworks of defence in the savage forests, marshes, and mountains that encompassed her, where the thoroughfares were streams choked with fallen trees and obstructed by cataracts. Never was the problem of moving troops, encumbered with baggage and artillery, a more difficult one. The question was less how to fight the enemy than how to get at him. If a few practicable roads had crossed this broad tract of wilderness, the war would have been shortened and its character changed.

From these and other reasons, the numerical superiority of the English was to some extent made unavailing. This superiority, though exaggerated by French writers, was nevertheless immense if estimated by the number of men called to arms; but only a part of these could be employed in offensive operations. The rest garrisoned forts and blockhouses and guarded the far reach of frontier from Nova Scotia to South Carolina, where a wily enemy, silent and secret as fate, choosing their own time and place of attack, and striking unawares at every unguarded spot, compelled thousands of men, scattered at countless points of defence, to keep unceasing watch against a few hundred savage marauders. Full half the levies of the colonies, and many of the regulars, were used in service of this kind.

In actual encounters the advantage of numbers was often with the French, through the comparative ease with which they could concentrate their forces at a given point. Of the ten considerable sieges or battles of the war, five, besides the great bushfight in which the Indians defeated Braddock, were victories for France; and in four of these — Oswego, Fort William Henry, Montmorenci, and Ste.-Foy — the odds were greatly on her side.

Yet in this the most picturesque and dramatic of American wars, there is nothing more noteworthy than the skill with which the French and Canadian leaders used their advantages; the indomitable spirit with which, slighted and abandoned as they were, they grappled with prodigious difficulties, and the courage with which they were seconded by regulars and militia alike. In spite of occasional lapses, the defence of Canada deserves a tribute of admiration.

CHAPTER XXXI.

1758-1763.

THE PEACE OF PARIS.

EXODUS OF CANADIAN LEADERS. — WRECK OF THE "AUGUSTE." — TRIAL OF BIGOT AND HIS CONFEDERATES. — FREDERIC OF PRUSSIA. — HIS TRIUMPHS. — HIS REVERSES. — HIS PERIL. — HIS FORTITUDE. — DEATH OF GEORGE II. — CHANGE OF POLICY. — CHOISEUL. — HIS OVERTURES OF PEACE. — THE FAMILY COMPACT. — FALL OF PITT. — DEATH OF THE CZARINA. — FREDERIC SAVED. — WAR WITH SPAIN. — CAPTURE OF HAVANA. — NEGOTIATIONS. — TERMS OF PEACE. — SHALL CANADA BE RESTORED? — SPEECH OF PITT. — THE TREATY SIGNED. — END OF THE SEVEN YEARS WAR.

IN accordance with the terms of the capitulation of Montreal, the French military officers, with such of the soldiers as could be kept together, as well as all the chief civil officers of the colony, sailed for France in vessels provided by the conquerors. They were voluntarily followed by the principal members of the Canadian noblesse, and by many of the merchants who had no mind to swear allegiance to King George. The peasants and poorer colonists remained at home to begin a new life under a new flag.

Though this exodus of the natural leaders of Canada was in good part deferred till the next year, and though the number of persons to be immediately embarked was reduced by the desertion of many French soldiers who had married

Canadian wives, yet the English authorities were sorely perplexed to find vessels enough for the motley crowd of passengers. When at last they were all on their way, a succession of furious autumnal storms fell upon them. The ship that carried Lévis barely escaped wreck, and that which bore Vaudreuil and his wife fared little better.¹ Worst of all was the fate of the “Auguste,” on board of which was the bold but ruthless partisan, Saint-Luc de la Corne, his brother, his children, and a party of Canadian officers, together with ladies, merchants, and soldiers. A worthy ecclesiastical chronicler paints the unhappy vessel as a floating Babylon, and sees in her fate the stern judgment of Heaven.² It is true that New France ran riot in the last years of her existence; but before the “Auguste” was well out of the St. Lawrence she was so tossed and buffeted, so lashed with waves and pelted with rain, that the most alluring forms of sin must have lost their charm, and her inmates passed days rather of penance than transgression. There was a violent storm as the ship entered the Gulf; then a calm, during which she took fire in the cook’s galley. The crew and passengers subdued the flames after desperate efforts; but their only food thenceforth was dry biscuit. Off the coast of Cape Breton another gale rose. They lost their reckoning and lay tossing blindly amid the tempest. The exhausted sailors took, in despair, to their hammocks, from which neither commands nor blows could rouse them, while amid shrieks, tears, prayers, and vows to Heaven, the "Auguste" drove towards the shore, struck, and rolled over on her side. La Corne with six others gained the beach; and towards night they saw the ship break asunder, and counted a hundred and fourteen corpses strewn along the sand. Aided by Indians and by English officers, La Corne made his way on snow-shoes up the St. John, and by a miracle of enduring hardihood reached Quebec before the end of winter.¹

¹ Lévis à Belleisle, 27 Nov. 1760.

² Faillon, Vie de Mademoiselle Le Ber, 363-370.

The other ships weathered the November gales, and landed their passengers on the shores of France, where some of them found a dismal welcome, being seized and thrown into the Bastille. These were Vaudreuil, Bigot, Cadet, Péan, Bréard, Varin, Le Mercier, Penisseault, Maurin, Corpron, and others accused of the frauds and peculations that had helped to ruin Canada. In the next year they were all put on trial, whether as an act of pure justice or as a device to turn public indignation from the Government. In December, 1761, judges commissioned for the purpose began their sessions at the Châtelet, and a prodigious mass of evidence was laid before them. Cadet, with brazen effrontery, at first declared himself innocent, but ended with full and unblushing confession. Bigot denied everything till silenced point by point with papers bearing his own signature. The prisoners defended themselves by accusing each other. Bigot and Vaudreuil brought mutual charges, while all agreed in denouncing Cadet. Vaudreuil, as before mentioned, was acquitted. Bigot was banished from France for life, his property was confiscated, and he was condemned to pay fifteen hundred thousand francs by way of restitution. Cadet was banished for nine years from Paris and required to refund six millions; while others were sentenced in sums varying from thirty thousand to eight hundred thousand francs, and were ordered to be held in prison till the money was paid. Of twenty-one persons brought to trial ten were condemned, six were acquitted, three received an admonition, and two were dismissed for want of evidence. Thirty-four failed to appear, of whom seven were sentenced in default, and judgment was reserved in the case of the rest.¹ Even those who escaped from justice profited little by their gains, for unless they had turned them betimes into land or other substantial values, they lost them in a discredited paper currency and dishonored bills of exchange.

¹ Journal du Voyage de M. Saint-Luc de la Corne. This is his own narrative.

While on the American continent the last scenes of the war were drawing to their close, the contest raged in Europe with unabated violence. England was in the full career of success; but her great ally, Frederic of Prussia, seemed tottering to his ruin. In the summer of 1758 his glory was at its height. French, Austrians, and Russians had all fled before him. But the autumn brought reverses; and the Austrian general, Daun, at the head of an overwhelming force, gained over him a partial victory, which his masterly strategy robbed of its fruits. It was but a momentary respite. His kingdom was exhausted by its own triumphs. His best generals were dead, his best soldiers killed or disabled, his resources almost spent, the very chandeliers of his palace melted into coin; and all Europe was in arms against him. The disciplined valor of the Prussian troops and the supreme leadership of their undespairing King had thus far held the invading hosts at bay; but now the end seemed near. Frederic could not be everywhere at once; and while he stopped one leak the torrent poured in at another. The Russians advanced again, defeated General Wedell, whom he sent against them, and made a junction with the Austrians. In August, 1759, he attacked their united force at Kunersdorf, broke their left wing to pieces, took a hundred and eighty cannon, forced their centre to give ground, and after hours of furious fighting was overwhelmed at last. In vain he tried to stop the rout. The bullets killed two horses under him, tore his clothes, and crushed a gold snuff-box in his waistcoat pocket. "Is there no b — of a shot that can hit me, then?" he cried in his bitterness, as his aides-de-camp forced him from the field. For a few days he despaired; then rallied to his forlorn task, and with smiles on his lip and anguish at his heart watched, manœuvred, and fought with cool and stubborn desperation. To his friend D'Argens he wrote soon after his defeat: "Death is sweet in comparison to such a life as mine. Have pity on me and it; believe that I still keep to myself a great many evil things, not wishing to afflict or disgust anybody with them, and that I would not counsel you to fly these unlucky countries if I had any ray of hope. Adieu, mon cher!" It was well for him and for Prussia that he had strong allies in the dissensions and delays of his enemies. But his cup was not yet full. Dresden was taken from him, eight of his remaining generals and twelve thousand men were defeated and captured at Maxen, and "this infernal campaign," as he calls it, closed in thick darkness.

¹ Jugement rendu souverainement et en dernier Ressort dans l'Affaire du Canada. Papers at the Châtelet of Paris, cited by Dussieux.

"I wrap myself in my stoicism as best I can," he writes to Voltaire. "If you saw me you would hardly know me: I am old, broken, gray-headed, wrinkled. If this goes on there will be nothing left of me but the mania of making verses and an inviolable attachment to my duties and to the few virtuous men I know. But you will not get a peace signed by my hand except on conditions honorable to my nation. Your people, blown up with conceit and folly, may depend on this."

The same stubborn conflict with overmastering odds, the same intrepid resolution, the same subtle strategy, the same skill in eluding the blow and lightning-like quickness in retorting it, marked Frederic's campaign of 1760. At Liegnitz three armies, each equal to his own, closed round him, and he put them all to flight. While he was fighting in Silesia, the Allies marched upon Berlin, took it, and held it three days, but withdrew on his approach. For him there was no peace. "Why weary you with the details of my labors and my sorrows?" he wrote again to his faithful D'Argens. "My spirits have forsaken me; all gayety is buried with the loved noble ones to whom my heart was bound." He had lost his mother and his devoted sister Wilhelmina. "You as a follower of Epicurus put a value upon life; as for me, I regard death from the Stoic point of view. I have told you, and I repeat it, never shall my hand sign a humiliating peace. Finish this campaign I will, resolved to dare all, to succeed, or find a glorious end." Then came the victory of Torgau, the last and one of the most desperate of his battles: a success dearly bought, and bringing neither rest nor safety. Once more he wrote to D'Argens: "Adieu, dear Marquis; write to me sometimes. Don't forget a poor devil who curses his fatal existence ten times a day." "I live like a military monk. Endless business, and a little consolation from my books. I don't know if I shall outlive this war, but if I do I am firmly resolved to pass the rest of my life in solitude in the bosom of philosophy and friendship. Your nation, you see, is blinder than you thought. These fools will lose their Canada and Pondicherry to please the Queen of Hungary and the Czarina."

The campaign of 1761 was mainly defensive on the part of Frederic. In the exhaustion of his resources he could see no means of continuing the struggle. "It is only Fortune," says the royal sceptic, "that can extricate me from the situation I am in. I escape out of it by looking at the universe on the great scale like an observer from some distant planet. All then seems to be so infinitely small that I could almost pity my enemies for giving themselves so much trouble about so very little. I read a great deal, I devour my books. But for them I think hypochondria would have had me in Bedlam before now. In fine, dear Marquis, we live in troublous times and desperate situations. I have all the properties of a stage hero; always in danger, always on the point of perishing."¹ And in another mood: "I begin to feel that, as the Italians say, revenge is a pleasure for the gods. My philosophy is worn out by suffering. I am no saint, and I will own that I should die content if only I could first inflict a part of the misery that I endure."

While Frederic was fighting for life and crown, an event took place in England that was to have great influence on the war. Walpole recounts it thus, writing to George Montagu on the twenty-fifth of October, 1760: "My man Harry tells me all the amusing news. He first told me of the late Prince of Wales's death, and to-day of the King's; so I must tell you all I know of departed majesty. He went to bed well last night, rose at six this morning as usual, looked, I suppose, if all his money was in his purse, and called for his chocolate. A little after seven he went into the closet; the German valet-de-chambre heard a noise, listened, heard something like a groan, ran in, and found the hero of Oudenarde and Dettingen on the floor with a gash on his right temple by falling against the corner of a bureau. He tried to speak, could not, and expired. The great ventricle of the heart had burst. What an enviable death!"

¹ The above extracts are as translated by Carlyle in his History of Frederick II. of Prussia.

The old King was succeeded by his grandson, George III., a mirror of domestic virtues, conscientious, obstinate, narrow. His accession produced political changes that had been preparing for some time. His grandfather was German at heart, loved his Continental kingdom of Hanover, and was eager for all measures that looked to its defence and preservation. Pitt, too, had of late vigorously supported the Continental war, saying that he would conquer America in Germany. Thus with different views the King and the Minister had concurred in the same measures. But George III. was English by birth, language, and inclination. His ruling passion was the establishment and increase of his own authority. He disliked Pitt, the representative of the people. He was at heart averse to a war, the continuance of which would make the Great Commoner necessary, and therefore powerful, and he wished for a peace that would give free scope to his schemes for strengthening the prerogative. He was not alone in his pacific inclinations. The enemies of the haughty Minister, who had ridden rough-shod over men far above him in rank, were tired of his ascendancy, and saw no hope of ending it but by ending the war. Thus a peace party grew up, and the young King became its real, though not at first its declared, supporter.

The Tory party, long buried, showed signs of resurrection. There were those among its members who, even in a king of the hated line of Hanover, could recognize and admire the same spirit of arbitrary domination that had marked their fallen idols, the Stuarts; and they now joined hands with the discontented Whigs in opposition to Pitt. The horrors of war, the blessings of peace, the weight of taxation, the growth of the national debt, were the rallying cries of the new party; but the mainspring of their zeal was hostility to the great Minister. Even his own colleagues chafed under his spirit of mastery; the chiefs of the Opposition longed to inherit his power; and the King had begun to hate him as a lion in his path. Pitt held to his purpose regardless of the gathering storm. That purpose, as proclaimed by his adherents, was to secure a solid and lasting peace, which meant the reduction of France to so low an estate that she could no more be a danger to her rival. In this he had the sympathy of the great body of the nation.

Early in 1761 the King, a fanatic for prerogative, set his enginery in motion. The elections for the new Parliament were manipulated in his interest. If he disliked Pitt as the representative of the popular will, he also disliked his colleague, the shuffling and uncertain Newcastle, as the representative of a too powerful nobility. Elements hostile to both were introduced into the Cabinet and the great offices. The King's favorite, the Earl of Bute, supplanted Holdernessee as Secretary of State for the Northern Department; Charles Townshend, an opponent of Pitt, was made Secretary of War; Legge, Chancellor of the Exchequer, was replaced by Viscount Barrington, who was sure for the King; while a place in the Cabinet was also given to the Duke of Bedford, one of the few men who dared face the formidable Minister. It was the policy of the King and his following to abandon Prussia, hitherto supported by British subsidies, make friends with Austria and Russia at her expense, and conclude a separate peace with France.

France was in sore need of peace. The infatuation that had turned her from her own true interest to serve the passions of Maria Theresa and the Czarina Elizabeth had brought military humiliation and financial ruin. Abbé de Bernis, Minister of Foreign Affairs, had lost the favor of Madame de Pompadour, and had been supplanted by the Duc de Choiseul. The new Minister had gained his place by pleasing the favorite; but he kept it through his own ability and the necessities of the time. The Englishman Stanley, whom Pitt sent to negotiate with him, drew this sketch of his character: "Though he may have his superiors, not only in experience of business, but in depth and refinement as a statesman, he is a person of as bold and daring a spirit as any man whatever in our country or in his own. Madame Pompadour has ever been looked upon by all preceding courtiers and ministers as their tutelary deity, under whose auspices only they could exist, and who was as much out of their reach as if she were of a superior class of beings; but this Minister is so far from being in subordination to her influence that he seized the first opportunity of depriving her not of an equality, but of any share of power, reducing her to the necessity of applying to him even for those favors that she wants for herself and her dependents. He has effected this great change, which every other man would have thought impossible, in the interior of the Court, not by plausibility, flattery, and address, but with a high hand, with frequent railleries and sarcasms which would have ruined any other, and, in short, by a clear superiority of spirit and resolution.”¹

Choiseul was vivacious, brilliant, keen, penetrating; believing nothing, fearing nothing; an easy moralist, an uncertain ally, a hater of priests; light-minded, inconstant; yet a kind of patriot, eager to serve France and retrieve her fortunes.

He flattered himself with no illusions. “Since we do not know how to make war,” he said, “we must make peace;”² and he proposed a congress of all the belligerent Powers at Augsburg. At the same time, since the war in Germany was distinct from the maritime and colonial war of France and England, he proposed a separate negotiation with the British Court in order to settle the questions between them as a preliminary to the general pacification. Pitt consented, and Stanley went as envoy to Versailles; while M. de Bussy came as envoy to London and, in behalf of Choiseul, offered terms of peace, the first of which was the entire abandonment of Canada to England.¹ But the offers were accompanied by the demand that Spain, which had complaints of its own against England, should be admitted as a party to the negotiation, and even hold in some measure the attitude of a mediator. Pitt spurned the idea with fierce contempt. "Time enough to treat of all that, sir, when the Tower of London is taken sword in hand."² He bore his part with the ability that never failed him, and with a supreme arrogance that rose to a climax in his demand that the fortress of Dunkirk should be demolished, not because it was any longer dangerous to England, but because the nation would regard its destruction "as an eternal monument of the yoke imposed on France."³

¹ Stanley to Pitt, 6 Aug. 1761, in Grenville Correspondence, I. 367, note.

² Flassan, Diplomatie Française, V. 376 (Paris, 1809).

Choiseul replied with counter-propositions less humiliating to his nation. When the question of accepting or rejecting them came before the Ministry, the views of Pitt prevailed by a majority of one, and, to the disappointment of Bute and the

¹ See the proposals in Entick, V. 161.

² Beatson, Military Memoirs, II. 434. The Count de Fuentes to the Earl of Egremont, 25 Dec. 1761, in Entick, V. 264.

³ On this negotiation, see Mémoire historique sur la Négociation de la France et de l'Angleterre (Paris, 1761), a French Government publication containing papers on both sides. The British Ministry also published such documents as they saw fit, under the title of Papers relating to the Rupture with Spain. Compare Adolphus, George III., I. 31-39.

King, the conferences were broken off. Choiseul, launched again on the billows of a disastrous war, had seen and provided against the event. Ferdinand VI. of Spain had died, and Carlos III. had succeeded to his throne. Here, as in England, change of kings brought change of policy. While negotiating vainly with Pitt, the French Minister had negotiated secretly and successfully with Carlos; and the result was the treaty known as the Family Compact, having for its object the union of the various members of the House of Bourbon in common resistance to the growing power of England. It provided that in any future war the Kings of France and Spain should act as one towards foreign Powers, insomuch that the enemy of either should be the enemy of both; and the Bourbon princes of Italy were invited to join in the covenant.¹ What was more to the present purpose, a special agreement was concluded on the same day, by which Spain bound herself to declare war against England unless that Power should make peace with France before the first of May, 1762. For the safety of her colonies and her trade Spain felt it her interest to join her sister nation in putting a check on the vast expansion of British maritime power. She could bring a hundred ships of war to aid the dilapidated navy of France, and the wealth of the Indies to aid her ruined treasury.

Pitt divined the secret treaty, and soon found evidence of it. He resolved to demand at once full explanation from Spain; and, failing to receive a satisfactory reply, attack her at home and abroad before she was prepared. On the second of October he laid his plan before a Cabinet Council held at a house in St. James Street. There were present the Earl of Bute, the Duke of Newcastle, Earl Granville, Earl Temple, and others of the Ministry. Pitt urged his views with great warmth. "This," he exclaimed, "is the time for humbling the whole House of Bourbon!"¹ His brother-in-law, Temple, supported him. Newcastle kept silent. Bute denounced the proposal, and the rest were of his mind. "If these views are to be followed," said Pitt, "this is the last time I can sit at this board. I was called to the administration of affairs by the voice of the people; to them I have always considered myself as accountable for my conduct; and therefore cannot remain in a situation which makes me responsible for measures I am no longer allowed to guide." Nothing could be more offensive to George III. and his adherents.

¹ Flassan, Diplomatie Française, V. 317 (Paris, 1809).

The veteran Carteret, Earl Granville, replied angrily: "I find the gentleman is determined to leave us; nor can I say I am sorry for it, since otherwise he would certainly have compelled us to leave him. But if he is resolved to assume the office of exclusively advising His Majesty and directing the operations of the war, to what purpose are we called to this council? When he talks of being responsible to the people, he talks the language of the House of Commons, and forgets that at this board he is responsible only to the King. However, though he may possibly have convinced himself of his infallibility, still it remains that we should be equally convinced before we can resign our understandings to his direction, or join with him in the measure he proposes.”¹

¹ Beatson, II. 438.

Pitt resigned, and his colleagues rejoiced.² Power fell to Bute and the Tories; and great was the fall. The mass of the nation was with the defeated Minister. On Lord Mayor’s Day Bute and Barrington were passing St. Paul’s in a coach, which the crowd mistook for that of Pitt, and cheered lustily; till one man, looking in at the window, shouted to the rest: “This is n’t Pitt; it’s Bute, and be damned to him!” The cheers turned forthwith to hisses, mixed with cries of “No Bute!” “No Newcastle salmon!” “Pitt forever!” Handfuls of mud were showered against the coach, and Barrington’s ruffles were besmirched with it.³

The fall of Pitt was like the knell of doom to Frederic of Prussia. It meant abandonment by his only ally, and the loss of the subsidy which was his chief resource. The darkness around him grew darker yet, and not a hope seemed left; when as by miracle the clouds broke, and light streamed out of the blackness. The bitterest of his foes, the Czarina Elizabeth, she whom he had called infâme catin du Nord, died, and was succeeded by her nephew, Peter III. Here again, as in England and Spain, a new sovereign brought new measures. The young Czar, simple and enthusiastic, admired the King of Prussia, thought him the paragon of heroes, and proclaimed himself his friend. No sooner was he on the throne than Russia changed front. From the foe of Frederic she became his ally; and in the opening campaign of 1762 the army that was to have aided in crushing him was ranged on his side. It was a turn of fortune too sharp and sudden to endure. Ill-balanced and extreme in all things, Peter plunged into headlong reforms, exasperated the clergy and the army, and alienated his wife, Catherine, who had hoped to rule in his name, and who now saw herself supplanted by his mistress. Within six months he was deposed and strangled. Catherine, one of whose lovers had borne part in the murder, reigned in his stead, conspicuous by the unbridled disorders of her life, and by powers of mind that mark her as the ablest of female sovereigns. If she did not share her husband's enthusiasm for Frederic, neither did she share Elizabeth's hatred of him. He, on his part, taught by hard experience, conciliated instead of insulting her, and she let him alone.

¹ Annual Register, 1761, p. 44. Adolphus, George III., I. 40. Thackeray, Life of Chatham, I. 592.

² Walpole, George III., I. 80, and note by Sir Denis Le Marchant, 80–82.

³ Nuthall to Lady Chatham, 12 Nov. 1761, in Chatham Correspondence, II. 166.

Peace with Russia brought peace with Sweden, and Austria with the Germanic Empire stood alone against him. France needed all her strength to hold her own against the mixed English and German force under Ferdinand of Brunswick in the Rhine countries. She made spasmodic efforts to seize upon Hanover, but the result was humiliating defeat.

In England George III. pursued his policy of strengthening the prerogative, and, jealous of the Whig aristocracy, attacked it in the person of Newcastle. In vain the old politician had played false with Pitt, and trimmed to please his young master. He was worried into resigning his place in the Cabinet, and Bute, the obsequious agent of the royal will, succeeded him as First Lord of the Treasury. Into his weak and unwilling hands now fell the task of carrying on the war; for the nation, elated with triumphs and full of fight, still called on its rulers for fresh efforts and fresh victories. Pitt had proved a true prophet, and his enemies were put to shame; for the attitude of Spain forced Bute and his colleagues to the open rupture with her which the great Minister had vainly urged upon them; and a new and formidable war was now added to the old.¹ Their counsels were weak and half-hearted; but the armies and navies of England still felt the impulsion that the imperial hand of Pitt had given and the unconquerable spirit that he had roused.

This spirit had borne them from victory to victory. In Asia they had driven the French from Pondicherry and all their Indian possessions; in Africa they had wrested from them Gorée and the Senegal country; in the West Indies they had taken Guadeloupe and Dominica; in the European seas they had captured ship after ship, routed and crippled the great fleet of Admiral Conflans, seized Belleisle, and defeated a bold attempt to invade Ireland. The navy of France was reduced to helplessness. Pitt, before his resignation, had planned a series of new operations, including an attack on Martinique, with other West Indian islands still left to France, and then in turn on the Spanish possessions of Havana, Panama, Manila, and the Philippines. Now, more than ever before, the war appeared in its true character. It was a contest for maritime and colonial ascendancy; and England saw herself confronted by both her great rivals at once.

¹ Declaration of War against the King of Spain, 4 Jan. 1762.

Admiral Rodney sailed for Martinique, and Brigadier Monckton joined him with troops from America. Before the middle of February the whole island was in their hands; and Grenada, St. Lucia, and St. Vincent soon shared its fate. The Earl of Albemarle and Admiral Sir George Pococke sailed in early spring on a more important errand, landed in June near Havana with eleven thousand soldiers, and attacked Moro Castle, the key of the city. The pitiless sun of the tropic midsummer poured its fierce light and heat on the parched rocks where the men toiled at the trenches. Earth was so scarce that hardly enough could be had to keep the fascines in place. The siege works were little else than a mass of dry faggots; and when, after exhausting toil, the grand battery opened on the Spanish defences, it presently took fire, was consumed, and had to be made anew.

Fresh water failed, and the troops died by scores from thirst; fevers set in, killed many, and disabled nearly half the army. The sea was strewn with floating corpses, and carrion-birds in clouds hovered over the populous graveyards and infected camps. Yet the siege went on: a formidable sally was repulsed; Moro Castle was carried by storm; till at length, two months and eight days after the troops landed, Havana fell into their hands.¹ At the same time Spain was attacked at the antipodes, and the loss of Manila and the Philippines gave her fresh cause to repent her rash compact with France. She was hardly more fortunate near home; for having sent an army to invade Portugal, which was in the interest of England, a small British force, under Brigadier Burgoyne, foiled it, and forced it to retire.

The tide of British success was checked for an instant in Newfoundland, where a French squadron attacked St. John's and took it, with its garrison of sixty men. The news reached Amherst at New York; his brother, Lieutenant-Colonel Amherst, was sent to the scene of the mishap. St. John's was retaken, and its late conquerors were made prisoners of war.

The financial condition of France was desperate. Her people were crushed with taxation; her debt grew apace; and her yearly expenditure was nearly double her revenue. Choiseul felt the need of immediate peace; and George III. and Bute were hardly less eager for it, to avert the danger of Pitt's return to power and give free scope to their schemes for strengthening the prerogative. Therefore, in September, 1762, negotiations were resumed. The Duke of Bedford was sent to Paris to settle the preliminaries, and the Duc de Nivernois came to London on the same errand. The populace were still for war. Bedford was hissed as he passed through the streets of London, and a mob hooted at the puny figure of Nivernois as he landed at Dover.

¹ Journal of the Siege, by the Chief Engineer, in Beatson, II. 544. Mante, 398-465. Entick, V. 363-383.

The great question was, Should Canada be restored? Should France still be permitted to keep a foothold on the North American continent? Ever since the capitulation of Montreal a swarm of pamphlets had discussed the momentous subject. Some maintained that the acquisition of Canada was not an original object of the war; that the colony was of little value and ought to be given back to its old masters; that Guadeloupe should be kept instead, the sugar trade of that island being worth far more than the Canadian fur trade; and, lastly, that the British colonists, if no longer held in check by France, would spread themselves over the continent, learn to supply all their own wants, grow independent, and become dangerous. Nor were these views confined to Englishmen. There were foreign observers who clearly saw that the adhesion of her colonies to Great Britain would be jeopardized by the extinction of French power in America. Choiseul warned Stanley that they "would not fail to shake off their dependence the moment Canada should be ceded ;” while thirteen years before, the Swedish traveller Kalm declared that the presence of the French in America gave the best assurance to Great Britain that its own colonies would remain in due subjection.¹

The most noteworthy argument on the other side was that of Franklin, whose words find a strange commentary in the events of the next few years. He affirmed that the colonies were so jealous of each other that they would never unite against England. “If they could not agree to unite against the French and Indians, can it reasonably be supposed that there is any danger of their uniting against their own nation, which it is well known they all love much more than they love one another? I will venture to say union amongst them for such a purpose is not merely improbable, it is impossible ;” that is, he prudently adds, without “the most grievous tyranny and oppression,” like the bloody rule of “Alva in the Netherlands.”²

If Pitt had been in office he would have demanded terms that must ruin past redemption the maritime and colonial power of France ; but

¹ Kalm, Travels in North America, I. 207.

² Interest of Great Britain in regard to her Colonies (London, 1760).

Lord Bath argues for retaining Canada in A Letter addressed to Two Great Men on the Prospect of Peace (1759). He is answered by another pamphlet called Remarks on the Letter to Two Great Men (1760). The Gentleman's Magazine for 1759 has an ironical article styled Reasons for restoring Canada to the French ; and in 1761 a pamphlet against the restitution appeared under the title, Importance of Canada considered in Two Letters to a Noble Lord. These are but a part of the writings on the question.

Bute was less exacting. In November the plenipotentiaries of England, France, and Spain agreed on preliminaries of peace, in which the following were the essential points. France ceded to Great Britain Canada and all her possessions on the North American continent east of the River Mississippi, except the city of New Orleans and a small adjacent district. She renounced her claims to Acadia, and gave up to the conqueror the Island of Cape Breton, with all other islands in the Gulf and River of St. Lawrence. Spain received back Havana, and paid for it by the cession of Florida, with all her other possessions east of the Mississippi. France, subject to certain restrictions, was left free to fish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and off a part of the coast of Newfoundland; and the two little islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon were given her as fishing stations on condition that she should not fortify or garrison them. In the West Indies, England restored the captured islands of Guadeloupe, Marigalante, Désirade, and Martinique, and France ceded Grenada and the Grenadines; while it was agreed that of the so-called neutral islands, St. Vincent, Dominica, and Tobago should belong to England, and St. Lucia to France. In Europe, each side promised to give no more help to its allies in the German war. France restored Minorca, and England restored Belleisle; France gave up such parts of Hanoverian territory as she had occupied, and evacuated certain fortresses belonging to Prussia, pledging herself at the same time to demolish, under the inspection of English engineers, her own maritime fortress of Dunkirk. In Africa France ceded Senegal, and received back the small Island of Gorée. In India she lost everything she had gained since the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle; recovered certain trading stations, but renounced the right of building forts or maintaining troops in Bengal.

On the day when the preliminaries were signed, France made a secret agreement with Spain, by which she divested herself of the last shred of her possessions on the North American continent. As compensation for Florida, which her luckless ally had lost in her quarrel, she made over to the Spanish Crown the city of New Orleans, and under the name of Louisiana gave her the vast region spreading westward from the Mississippi towards the Pacific.

On the ninth of December the question of approving the preliminaries came up before both Houses of Parliament. There was a long debate in the Commons. Pitt was not present, confined, it was said, by gout; till late in the day the House was startled by repeated cheers from the outside. The doors opened, and the fallen Minister entered, carried in the arms of his servants, and followed by an applauding crowd. His bearers set him down within the bar, and by the help of a crutch he made his way with difficulty to his seat. "There was a mixture of the very solemn and the theatric in this apparition," says Walpole, who was present. "The moment was so well timed, the importance of the man and his services, the languor of his emaciated countenance, and the study bestowed on his dress were circumstances that struck solemnity into a patriot mind, and did a little furnish ridicule to the hardened and insensible. He was dressed in black velvet, his legs and thighs wrapped in flannel, his feet covered with buskins of black cloth, and his hands with thick gloves." Not for the first time, he was utilizing his maladies for purposes of stage effect. He spoke for about three hours, sometimes standing, and sometimes seated; sometimes with a brief burst of power, more often with the accents of pain and exhaustion. He highly commended the retention of Canada, but denounced the leaving to France a share in the fisheries, as well as other advantages tending to a possible revival of her maritime power. But the Commons listened coldly, and by a great majority approved the preliminaries of peace.

These preliminaries were embodied in the definitive treaty concluded at Paris on the tenth of February, 1763. Peace between France and England brought peace between the warring nations of the Continent. Austria, bereft of her allies, and exhausted by vain efforts to crush Frederic, gave up the attempt in despair, and signed the treaty of Hubertsburg. The Seven Years War was ended.

CHAPTER XXXII.

1763-1884.

CONCLUSION.

RESULTS OF THE WAR. — GERMANY. — FRANCE. — ENGLAND. — CANADA. — THE BRITISH PROVINCES.

“THIS,” said Earl Granville on his deathbed, “has been the most glorious war and the most triumphant peace that England ever knew.” Not all were so well pleased, and many held with Pitt that the House of Bourbon should have been forced to drain the cup of humiliation to the dregs. Yet the fact remains that the Peace of Paris marks an epoch than which none in modern history is more fruitful of grand results. With it began a new chapter in the annals of the world. To borrow the words of a late eminent writer, “It is no exaggeration to say that three of the many victories of the Seven Years War determined for ages to come the destinies of mankind. With that of Rossbach began the re-creation of Germany; with that of Plassey the influence of Europe told for the first time since the days of Alexander on the nations of the East; with the triumph of Wolfe on the Heights of Abraham began the history of the United States.”¹

¹ Green, History of the English People, IV. 193 (London, 1880).

So far, however, as concerns the war in the Germanic countries, it was to outward seeming but a mad debauch of blood and rapine, ending in nothing but the exhaustion of the combatants. The havoc had been frightful. According to the King of Prussia's reckoning, 853,000 soldiers of the various nations had lost their lives, besides hundreds of thousands of non-combatants who had perished from famine, exposure, disease, or violence. And with all this waste of life not a boundary line had been changed. The rage of the two empresses and the vanity and spite of the concubine had been completely foiled. Frederic had defied them all, and had come out of the strife intact in his own hereditary dominions and master of all that he had snatched from the Empress-Queen; while Prussia, portioned out by her enemies as their spoil, lay depleted indeed, and faint with deadly striving, but crowned with glory, and with the career before her which, through tribulation and adversity, was to lead her at last to the headship of a united Germany.

Through centuries of strife and vicissitude the French monarchy had triumphed over nobles, parliaments, and people, gathered to itself all the forces of the State, beamed with illusive splendors under Louis the Great, and shone with the phosphorescence of decay under his contemptible successor; till now, robbed of prestige, burdened with debt, and mined with corruption, it was moving swiftly and more swiftly towards the abyss of ruin.

While the war hastened the inevitable downfall of the French monarchy, it produced still more notable effects. France under Colbert had embarked on a grand course of maritime and colonial enterprise, and followed it with an activity and vigor that promised to make her a great and formidable ocean power. It was she who led the way in the East, first trained the natives to fight her battles, and began that system of mixed diplomacy and war which, imitated by her rival, enabled a handful of Europeans to master all India. In North America her vast possessions dwarfed those of every other nation. She had built up a powerful navy and created an extensive foreign trade. All this was now changed. In India she was reduced to helpless inferiority, with total ruin in the future; and of all her boundless territories in North America nothing was left but the two island rocks on the coast of Newfoundland that the victors had given her for drying her codfish. Of her navy scarcely forty ships remained; all the rest were captured or destroyed. She was still great on the continent of Europe, but as a world power her grand opportunities were gone.

In England as in France the several members of the State had battled together since the national life began, and the result had been, not the unchecked domination of the Crown, but a system of balanced and adjusted forces, in which King, Nobility, and Commons all had their recognized places and their share of power. Thus in the war just ended two great conditions of success had been supplied: a people instinct with the energies of ordered freedom, and a masterly leadership to inspire and direct them.

All, and more than all, that France had lost England had won. Now, for the first time, she was beyond dispute the greatest of maritime and colonial Powers. Portugal and Holland, her precursors in ocean enterprise, had long ago fallen hopelessly behind. Two great rivals remained, and she had humbled the one and swept the other from her path. Spain, with vast American possessions, was sinking into the decay which is one of the phenomena of modern history; while France, of late a most formidable competitor, had abandoned the contest in despair. England was mistress of the seas, and the world was thrown open to her merchants, explorers, and colonists. A few years after the Peace the navigator Cook began his memorable series of voyages, and surveyed the strange and barbarous lands which after times were to transform into other Englands, vigorous children of this great mother of nations. It is true that a heavy blow was soon to fall upon her; her own folly was to alienate the eldest and greatest of her offspring. But nothing could rob her of the glory of giving birth to the United States; and, though politically severed, this gigantic progeny were to be not the less a source of growth and prosperity to the parent that bore them, joined with her in a triple kinship of laws, language, and blood. The war or series of wars that ended with the Peace of Paris secured the opportunities and set in action the forces that have planted English homes in every clime, and dotted the earth with English garrisons and posts of trade.

With the Peace of Paris ended the checkered story of New France; a story which would have been a history if faults of constitution and the bigotry and folly of rulers had not dwarfed it to an episode. Yet it is a noteworthy one in both its lights and its shadows: in the disinterested zeal of the founder of Quebec, the self-devotion of the early missionary martyrs, and the daring enterprise of explorers; in the spiritual and temporal vassalage from which the only escape was to the savagery of the wilderness; and in the swarming corruptions which were the natural result of an attempt to rule, by the absolute hand of a master beyond the Atlantic, a people bereft of every vestige of civil liberty. Civil liberty was given them by the British sword; but the conqueror left their religious system untouched, and through it they have imposed upon themselves a weight of ecclesiastical tutelage that finds few equals in the most Catholic countries of Europe. Such guardianship is not without certain advantages. When faithfully exercised it aids to uphold some of the tamer virtues, if that can be called a virtue which needs the constant presence of a sentinel to keep it from escaping: but it is fatal to mental robustness and moral courage; and if French Canada would fulfil its aspirations it must cease to be one of the most priest-ridden communities of the modern world.

Scarcely were they free from the incubus of France when the British provinces showed symptoms of revolt. The measures on the part of the mother-country which roused their resentment, far from being oppressive, were less burdensome than the navigation laws to which they had long submitted; and they resisted taxation by Parliament simply because it was in principle opposed to their rights as freemen. They did not, like the American provinces of Spain at a later day, sunder themselves from a parent fallen into decrepitude; but with astonishing audacity they affronted the wrath of England in the hour of her triumph, forgot their jealousies and quarrels, joined hands in the common cause, fought, endured, and won. The disunited colonies became the United States. The string of discordant communities along the Atlantic coast has grown to a mighty people, joined in a union which the earthquake of civil war served only to compact and consolidate. Those who in the weakness of their dissensions needed help from England against the savage on their borders have become a nation that may defy every foe but that most dangerous of all foes, herself, destined to a majestic future if she will shun the excess and perversion of the principles that made her great, prate less about the enemies of the past and strive more against the enemies of the present, resist the mob and the demagogue as she resisted Parliament and King, rally her powers from the race for gold and the delirium of prosperity to make firm the foundations on which that prosperity rests, and turn some fair proportion of her vast mental forces to other objects than material progress and the game of party politics. She has tamed the savage continent, peopled the solitude, gathered wealth untold, waxed potent, imposing, redoubtable; and now it remains for her to prove, if she can, that the rule of the masses is consistent with the highest growth of the individual; that democracy can give the world a civilization as mature and pregnant, ideas as energetic and vitalizing, and types of manhood as lofty and strong, as any of the systems which it boasts to supplant.

APPENDIX.

APPENDIX.

A.

CHAPTER III. CONFLICT FOR THE WEST.

Piquet and his War-Party. — “Ce parti [de guerre] pour lequel M. le Général a donné son consentement, sera de plus de 3,800 hommes. . . . 500 hommes de nos domiciliés, 700 des Cinq nations à l'exclusion des Agniers [Mohawks] qui ne sont plus regardés que comme des anglais, 600 tant Iroquois que d'autres nations le long de la Belle Rivière d'où ils espèrent chasser les anglais qui y forment des Établissemens contraires au bien des guerriers, 2,000 hommes qu'ils doivent prendre aux têtes plates [Choctaws] où ils s'arrêteront, c'est là où les deux chefs de guerre doivent proposer à l'armée l'expédition des Miamis au retour de celle contre la Nation du Chien [Cherokees]. Un vieux levain, quelques anciennes querelles leur feront tout entreprendre contre les anglais de la Virginie s'ils donnent encore quelques secours à cette dernière nation, ce qui ne manquera pas d'arriver. . . .

“C'est un grand miracle que malgré l'envie, les contradictions, l'opposition presque générale de tous les Villages sauvages, j'aye formé en moins de 3 ans une des plus florissantes missions du Canada. . . . Je me trouve donc, Messieurs, dans l'occasion de pouvoir étendre l'empire de Jésus Christ et du Roy mes bons maitres jusqu'aux extrémités de ce nouveau monde, et de plus faire avec quelques secours que vous me procurerez que la France et l'Angleterre ne pourraient faire avec plusieurs millions et toutes leur troupes.” Copie de la Lettre écrite par M. l’Abbé Piquet, dattée à la Présentation du 8 Fév. 1752 (Archives de la Marine).

I saw in the possession of the late Jacques Viger, of Montreal, an illuminated drawing of one of Piquet’s banners, said to be still in existence, in which the cross, the emblems of the Virgin and the Saviour, the fleur-de-lis, and the Iroquois totems are all embroidered and linked together by strings of wampum beads wrought into the silk.

Directions of the French Colonial Minister for the Destruction of Oswego. — “La seule voye dont on puisse faire usage en temps de paix pour une pareille opération est celle des Iroquois des cinq nations. Les terres sur lesquelles le poste a été établi leur appartiennent et ce n’est qu’avec leur consentement que les anglois s’y sont placés. Si en faisant regarder à ces sauvages un pareil établissement comme contraire à leur liberté et comme une usurpation dont les anglois prétendent faire usage pour acquérir la propriété de leur terre on pourrait les déterminer à entreprendre de les détruire, une pareille opération ne seroit pas à négliger; mais M. le Marquis de la Jonquière doit sentir avec quelle circonspection une affaire de cette espèce doit être conduite et il faut en effet qu’il y travaille de façon à ne se point compromettre.” Le Ministre à MM. de la Jonquière et Bigot, 15 Avril, 1750 (Archives de la Marine).

B.

CHAPTER IV. ACADIA.

English Treatment of Acadians. — “Les Anglois dans la vue de la Conquête du Canada ont voulu donner aux peuples françois de ces Colonies un exemple frappant de la douceur de leur gouvernement dans leur conduite à l’égard des Accadiens.

“Ils leur ont fourni pendant plus de 35 ans le simple nécessaire, sans élever la fortune d’aucun, ils leur ont fourni ce nécessaire souvent à crédit, avec un excès de confiance, sans fatiguer les débiteurs, sans les presser, sans vouloir les forcer au payement.

“Ils leur ont laissé une apparence de liberté si excessive qu’ils n’ont voulu prendre aucune différence [sic] de leur différens, pas même pour les crimes. . . . Ils ont souffert que les accadiens leur refusassent insolemment certains rentes de grains, modiques & très-légitimement dues.

“Ils ont dissimulé le refus méprisant que les accadiens ont fait de prendre d’eux des concessions pour les nouveaux terrains qu’ils voulaient occuper.

“Les fruits que cette conduite a produit dans la dernière guerre nous le savons [sic] et les anglois n’en ignorent rien. Qu’on juge là-dessus de leur ressentiment et des vues de vengeance de cette nation cruelle. . . . Je prévois notamment la dispersion des jeunes accadiens sur les vaisseaux de guerre anglois, où la seule règle pour la ration du pain suffit pour les détruire jusqu’au dernier.” Roma, Officier à l’Isle Royale à —, 1750.

Indians, directed by Missionaries, to attack the English in Time of Peace. — “La lettre de M. l’Abbé Le Loutre me paroît si intéressante que j’ay l’honneur de vous en envoyer Copie. . . . Les trois sauvages qui m’ont porté ces dépêches m’ont parlé relativement à ce que M. l’Abbé Le Loutre marque dans sa lettre; je n’ay eu garde de leur donner aucun Conseil là-dessus et je me suis borné à leur promettre que je ne les abandonnerai point, aussy ai-je pourvu à tout, soit pour les armes, munitions de guerre et de bouche, soit pour les autres choses nécessaires.

“Il seroit à souhaiter que ces Sauvages rassemblés pussent parvenir à traverser les anglois dans leurs entreprises, même dans celle de Chibouctou [Halifax], ils sont dans cette résolution et s’ils peuvent mettre à execution ce qu’ils ont projeté il est assuré qu’ils seront fort incommodes aux

Anglois et que les vexations qu'ils exerceront sur eux leur seront un très grand obstacle.

"Ces sauvages doivent agir seuls, il n'y aura ny soldat ny habitant, tout se fera de leur pur mouvement, et sans qu'il paraisse que j'en eusse connoissance.

"Cela est très essentiel, aussy ai-je écrit au S^r de Boishébert d'observer beaucoup de prudence dans ses démarches et de les faire très secrètement pour que les Anglois ne puissent pas s'apercevoir que nous pourvoyons aux besoins des dits sauvages.

"Ce seront les missionnaires qui feront toutes les négociations et qui dirigeront les pas des dits sauvages, ils sont en très bonnes mains, le R. P. Germain et M. l'Abbé Le Loutre étant fort au fait d'en tirer tout le party possible et le plus avantageux pour nos intérêts, ils ménageront leur intrigue de façon à n'y pas paroître. . . .

"Je sens, Monseigneur, toute la delicatesse de cette négociation, soyez persuadé que je la conduirai avec tant de précautions que les anglois ne pourront pas dire que mes ordres y ont eu part." La Jonquière au Ministre, 9 Oct. 1749.

Missionaries to be encouraged in their Efforts to make the Indians attack the English. — "Les sauvages . . . se distinguent, depuis la paix, dans les mouvements qu'il y a du côté de l'Acadie, et sur lesquels Sa Majesté juge à propos d'entrer dans quelques details avec le Sieur de Raymond. . . .

"Sa Majesté luy a déjà observé que les sauvages ont été jusqu'à présent dans les dispositions les plus favorables. Il est de la plus grande importance, et pour le présent et pour l'avenir, de ne rien négliger pour les y maintenir. Les missionnaires qui sont auprès d'eux sont plus à portés d'y contribuer que personne, et Sa Majesté a lieu d'être satisfaite des soins qu'ils y donnent. Le S^r de Raymond doit exciter ces missionnaires à ne point se relacher sur cela ; mais en même temps il doit les avertir de contenir leur zèle de manière qu'ils ne se compromettent pas mal à propos avec les anglois et qu'ils ne donnent point de justes sujets de plaintes.” Mémoire du Roy pour servir d’Instruction au Comte de Raymond, 24 Avril, 1751.

Acadians to join the Indians in attacking the English. — “Pour que ces Sauvages agissent avec beaucoup de Courage, quelques accadiens habillés et matachés comme les Sauvages pourront se joindre à eux pour faire coup sur les Anglois. Je ne puis éviter de consentir à ce que ces Sauvages feront puisque nous avons les bras liés et que nous ne pouvons rien faire par nous-mêmes, au surplus je ne crois pas qu’il y ait de l’inconvenient de laisser mêler les accadiens parmi les Sauvages, parceque s’ils sont pris, nous dirons qu’ils ont agi de leur propre mouvement.” La Jonquière au Ministre, 1 Mai, 1751.

Cost of Le Loutre’s Intrigues. — “J’ay déjà fait payer a M. Le Loutre depuis l’année dernière la somme de 11183*l.* 18*s.* pour acquitter les dépenses qu’il fait journellement et je ne cesse de luy recommander de s’en tenir aux indispensables en evitant toujours de rien compromettre avec le gouvernement anglois.” Prévost au Ministre, 22 Juillet, 1750.

Payment for English Scalps in Time of Peace. — “Les Sauvages ont pris, il y a un mois, 18 chevelures angloises [English scalps], et M. Le Loutre a été obligé de les payer 1800*l.*, argent de l’Acadie, dont je luy ay fait le remboursement.” Ibid., 16 Août, 1753.

Many pages might be filled with extracts like the above. These, with most of the other French documents used in Chapter IV., are taken from the Archives de la Marine et des Colonies.

C.

CHAPTER V. WASHINGTON.

Washington and the Capitulation at Fort Necessity. — Villiers, in his Journal, boasts that he made Washington sign a virtual admission that he had assassinated Jumon-ville. In regard to this point, a letter, of which the following is an extract, is printed in the provincial papers of the time. It is from Captain Adam Stephen, an officer in the action, writing to a friend five weeks after.

“When Mr. Vanbraam returned with the French proposals, we were obliged to take the sense of them from his mouth; it rained so heavy that he could not give us a written translation of them; we could scarcely keep the candle lighted to read them by; they were written in a bad hand, on wet and blotted paper, so that no person could read them but Vanbraam, who had heard them from the mouth of the French officer. Every officer there is ready to declare that there was no such word as assassination mentioned. The terms expressed were, the death of Jumonville. If it had been mentioned we would by all means have had it altered, as the French, during the course of the interview, seemed very condescending, and desirous to bring things to an issue.” He then gives several other points in which Vanbraam had misled them.

Dinwiddie, recounting the affair to Lord Albemarle, says that Washington, being ignorant of French, was deceived by the interpreter, who, through poltroonery, suppressed the word assassination.

Captain Mackay, writing to Washington in September, after a visit to Philadelphia, says: “I had several disputes about our capitulation; but I satisfied every person that mentioned the subject as to the articles in question, that they were owing to a bad interpreter, and contrary to the translation made to us when we signed them.”

At the next meeting of the burgesses they passed a vote of thanks for gallant conduct to Washington and all his officers by name, except Vanbraam and the major of the regiment, the latter being charged with cowardice, and the former with treacherous misinterpretation of the articles.

Sometime after, Washington wrote to a correspondent who had questioned him on the subject: “That we were wilfully or ignorantly deceived by our interpreter in regard to the word assassination I do aver, and will to my dying moment; so will every officer that was present. The interpreter was a Dutchman little acquainted with the English tongue, therefore might not advert to the tone and meaning of the word in English; but, whatever his motives for so doing, certain it is that he called it the death or the loss of the Sieur Jumonville. So we received and so we understood it, until, to our great surprise and mortification, we found it otherwise in a literal translation." Sparks, Writings of Washington, II. 464, 465.

D.

CHAPTER VII. BRADDOCK.

It has been said that Beaujeu, and not Contrecoeur, commanded at Fort Duquesne at the time of Braddock's expedition. Some contemporaries, and notably the chaplain of the fort, do, in fact, speak of him as in this position; but their evidence is overborne by more numerous and conclusive authorities, among them Vaudreuil, governor of Canada, and Contrecoeur himself, in an official report. Vaudreuil says of him: "Ce commandant s'occupa le 8 [Juillet] à former un parti pour aller au devant des Anglois;" and adds that this party was commanded by Beaujeu and consisted of 250 French and 650 Indians (Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Août, 1755). In the autumn of 1756 Vaudreuil asked the Colonial Minister to procure a pension for Contrecoeur and Ligneris. He says: "Le premier de ces Messieurs a commandé longtemps au fort Duquesne; c'est luy qui a ordonné et dirigé tous les mouvements qui se sont faits dans cette partie, soit pour faire abandonner le premier établissement des Anglois, soit pour les forcer à se retirer du fort Nécéssité, et soit enfin pour aller au devant de l'armée du Général Braddock qui a été entièrement défaite" (Vaudreuil au Ministre, 8 Nov. 1756). Beaujeu, who had lately arrived with a reinforcement, had been named to relieve Contrecoeur (Dumas au Ministre, 24 Juillet, 1756), but had not yet done so.

As the report of Contrecoeur has never been printed, I give an extract from it (Contrecoeur à Vaudreuil, 14 Juillet, 1755, in Archives de la Marine):—

“Le même jour [8 Juillet] je formai un party de tout ce que je pouvois mettre hors du fort pour aller à leur rencontre. Il étoit composé de 250 François et de 650 sauvages, ce qui faisoit 900 hommes. M. de Beaujeu, capitaine, le commandoit. Il y avoit deux capitaines qui estoient M^{rs} Dumas et Ligneris et plusieurs autres officiers subalternes. Ce parti se mit en marche le 9 à 8 heures du matin, et se trouva à midi et demie en présence des Anglois à environ 3 lieues du fort. On commença à faire feu de part et d'autre. Le feu de l'artillerie ennemie fit reculer un peu par deux fois notre parti. M. de Beaujeu fut tué à la troisième décharge. M. Dumas prit le commandement et s'en acquitta au mieux. Nos François, pleins de courage, soutenus par les sauvages, quoiqu'ils n'eussent point d'artillerie, firent à leur tour plier les Anglois qui se battirent en ordre de bataille et en bonne contenance. Et ces derniers voyant l'ardeur de nos gens qui fonçoient avec une vigueur infinie furent enfin obligés de plier tout à fait après 4 heures d'un grand feu. M^{rs} Dumas et Ligneris qui n'avoient plus avec eux qu'une vingtaine de François ne s'engagerent point dans la poursuite. Ils rentrèrent dans le fort, parceq'une grande partie des Canadiens qui n'estoient malheureusement que des enfants s'estoient retirés à la première décharge.”

The letter of Dumas cited in the text has been equally unknown. It was written a year after the battle in order to draw the attention of the minister to services which the writer thought had not been duly recognized. The following is an extract (Dumas au Ministre, 24 Juillet, 1756, in Archives de la Marine):—

“M. de Beaujeu marcha donc, et sous ses ordres M. de Ligneris et moi. Il attaqua avec beaucoup d’audace mais sans nulle disposition; notre première décharge fut faite hors de portée; l’ennemi fit la sienne de plus près, et dans le premier instant du combat, cent miliciens, qui faisaient la moitié de nos Français lâchèrent honteusement le pied en criant ‘Sauve qui peut.’ Deux cadets qui depuis ont été faits officiers autorisèrent cette fuite par leur exemple. Ce mouvement en arrière ayant encouragé l’ennemi, il fit retentir ses cris de Vive le Roi et avança sur nous à grand pas. Son artillerie s’étant préparée pendant ce temps là commença à faire feu ce qui épouvanta tellement les Sauvages que tout prit la fuite; l’ennemi faisait sa troisième décharge de mousqueterie quand M. de Beaujeu fut tué.

“Notre déroute se présenta à mes yeux sous le plus désagréable point de vue, et pour n’être point chargé de la mauvaise manœuvre d’autrui, je ne songeai plus qu’à me faire tuer. Ce fut alors, Monseigneur, qu’excitant de la voix et du geste le peu de soldats qui restait, je m’avançai avec la contenance qui donne le désespoir. Mon peloton fit un feu si vif que l’ennemi en parut étonné; il grossit insensiblement et les Sauvages voyant que mon attaque faisait cesser les cris de l’ennemi revinrent à moi. Dans ce moment j’envoyai M. le Chev^r Le Borgne et M. de Rocheblave dire aux officiers qui étaient à la tête des Sauvages de prendre l’ennemi en flanc. Le canon qui battit en tête donna faveur à mes ordres. L’ennemi, pris de tous cotés, combattit avec la fermeté la plus opiniâtre. Des rangs entiers tombaient à la fois; presque tous les officiers périrent; et le désordre s’étant mis par là dans cette colonne, tout prit la fuite.”

Whatever may have been the conduct of the Canadian militia, the French officers behaved with the utmost courage, and shared with the Indians the honors of the victory. The partisan chief Charles Langlade seems also to have been especially prominent. His grandson, the aged Pierre Grignon, declared that it was he who led the attack (Draper, Recollections of Grignon, in the Collections of the Wisconsin Historical Society, III.). Such evidence, taken alone, is of the least possible weight; but both the traveller Anbury and General John Burgoyne, writing many years after the event, speak of Langlade, who was then alive, as the author of Braddock's defeat. Hence there can be little doubt that he took an important part in it, though the contemporary writers do not mention his name. Compare Tassé, Notice sur Charles Langlade. The honors fell to Contrecoeur, Dumas, and Ligneris, all of whom received the cross of the Order of St. Louis (Ordres du Roy et Dépêches des Ministres, 1755).

E.

CHAPTER XIV. MONTCALM.

To show the style of Montcalm's familiar letters, I give a few examples. Literal translation is often impossible.

À MADAME DE MONTCALM, À MONTRÉAL, 16 AVRIL, 1757.

(Extrait.)

“Ma santé assez bonne, malgré beaucoup de travail, surtout d'écriture. Estève, mon secrétaire, se marie. Beau caractère. Bon autographe, écrivant vite. Je lui procure un emploi et le moyen de faire fortune s'il veut. Il fait un meilleur mariage que ne lui appartient; malgré cela je crains qu'il ne la fasse pas comme un autre; fat, frivole, joueur, glorieux, petit-maitre, dépensier. J'ai toujours Marcel, des soldats copistes dans le besoin. . . . Tous les soldats de Montpellier se portants bien, hors le fils de Pierre mort chez moi. Tout est hors de prix. Il faut vivre honorablement et je le fais, tous les jours seize personnes. Une fois tous les quinze jours chez M. le Gouverneur général et M^r le Chev. de Lévis qui vit aussi très bien. Il a donné trois beaux grands bals. Pour moi jusqu'au carême, outre les diners, de grands soupers de dames trois fois la semaine. Le jour des devotes prudes, des concerts. Les jours des jeûnes des violons d'hazard, parcequ'on me les demandait, cela ne menait que jusqu'à deux heures du matin et il se joignait l'après-souper compagnie dansante sans être priée, mais sure d'être bien reçue à celle qui avait soupé. Fort cher, peu amusant, et souvent ennuyeux. . . . Vous connaissiez ma maison, je l'ai augmentée d'un cocher, d'un frotteur, un garçon de cuisine, et j'ai marié mon aide de cuisine; car je travaille à peupler la colonie: 80 mariages de soldats cet hiver et deux d'officiers. Germain a perdu sa fille. Il a épousé mieux que lui; bonne femme mais sans bien, comme toutes. . . ."

À MADAME DE MONTCALM, À MONTRÉAL, 6 JUIN, 1757.

(Extrait.)

"J'adresse la première de cette lettre à ma mère. Il n'y a pas une heure dans la journée que je ne songe à vous, à elle, et à mes enfants. J'embrasse ma fille; je vous adore, ma très chère, ainsi que ma mère. Mille choses à mes sœurs. Je n'ai pas le temps de leur écrire, ni à Naujac, ni aux abbesses. . . . Des compliments au château d'Arbois, aux Du Cayla, et aux Givard. P. S. N'oubliez pas d'envoyer une douzaine de bouteilles d'Angleterre de pinte d'eau de lavande; vous en mettrez quatre pour chaque envoi."

À BOURLAMAQUE, À MONTRÉAL, 20 FÉVRIER, 1757.

(Extrait.)

"Dimanche j'avais rassemblé les dames de France hors Mad. de Parfouru qui m'a fait l'honneur de me venir voir il y a trois jours et en la voyant je me suis aperçu que l'amour avait des traits de puissance dont on ne pouvait pas rendre raison, non pas par l'impression qu'elle a faite sur mon cœur, mais bien par celle qu'elle a faite sur celui de son époux. Mercredi une assemblée chez Mad. Varin. Jeudi un bal chez le Chev. de Lévis qui avait prié 65 Dames ou demoiselles ; Il n'y en avait que trente — autant d'hommes qu'à la guerre. Sa salle bien éclairée, aussi grand que celle de l'Intendance, beaucoup d'ordre, beaucoup d'attention, des rafraichissements en abondance toute la nuit de tout genre et de toute espèce et on ne se retira qu'à sept heures du matin. Pour moi qui ay quitté le séjour de Québec, Je me couchai de bonne heure. J'avais eu ce jour-là huit dames à souper et ce souper était dédié à Mad. Varin. Demain j'en aurai une demi douzaine. Je ne scai encore a qui il est dédié, Je suis tenté de croire que c'est à La Roche Beaucourt Le galant Chev! nous donne encore un bal."

F.

CHAPTER XV. FORT WILLIAM HENRY.

WEBB TO LOUDON, FORT EDWARD, 11 AUG. 1757.

Public Record Office. (Extract.)

"ON leaving the Camp Yesterday Morning they [the English soldiers] were stript by the Indians of everything they had both Officers and Men the Women and Children drag'd from among them and most inhumanly butchered before their faces, the party of about three hundred Men which were given them as an escort were during this time quietly looking on, from this and other circumstances we are too well convinced these barbarities must have been connived at by the French, After having destroyed the women and children they fell upon the rear of our Men who running in upon the Front soon put the whole to a most precipitate flight in which confusion part of them came into this Camp about two o'Clock yesterday morning in a most distressing situation, and have continued dropping in ever since, a great many men and we are afraid several Officers were massacred."

The above is independent of the testimony of Frye, who did not reach Fort Edward till the day after Webb's letter was written.

FRYE TO THOMAS HUBBARD, SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF MASSACHUSETTS, ALBANY, 16 AUG. 1757.

Public Record Office. (Extract.)

"We did not march till ye 10th at which time the Savages were let loose upon us, Strips, Kills, & Scalps our people drove them into Disorder Rendered it impossible to Rally, the French Gaurds we were promised shou'd Escort us to Fort Edward Could or would not protect us so that there Opened the most horrid Scene of Barbarity imaginable, I was strip'd myself of my Arms & Cloathing that I had nothing left but Briches Stockings Shoes & Shirt, the Indians round me with their Tomehawks Spears & threatening Death I flew to the Officers of the French Gaurds for Protection but they would afford me none, therefore was Oblig'd to fly and was in the woods till the 12th in the Morning of which I arriv'd at Fort Edward almost Famished . . . with what of Fatigue Starving & I am obliged to break off but as soon as I can Recollect myself shall write to you more fully."

FRYE, JOURNAL OF THE ATTACK OF FORT WILLIAM HENRY.

Public Record Office. (Extract.)

"Wednesday, August 10th. — Early this morning we were ordered to prepare for our march, but found the Indians in a worse temper (if possible) than last night, every one having a tomahawk, hatchett or some other instrument of death, and Constantly plundering from the officers their arms &ca this Col: Monro Complained of, as a breach of the Articles of Capitulation but to no effect, the french officers however told us that if we would give up the baggage of the officers and men, to the Indians, they thought it would make them easy, which at last Col^o Monro Consented to but this was no sooner done, then they began to take the Officers Hatts, Swords, guns & Cloaths, stripping them all to their Shirts, and on some officers, left no shirt at all, while this was doing they killed and scalp'd all the sick and wounded before our faces and then took out from our troops, all the Indians and negroes, and Carried them off, one of the former they burnt alive afterwards.

“At last with great difficulty the troops gott from the Retrenchment, but they were no sooner out, then the savages fell upon the rear, killing & scalping, which Occasioned an order for a halt, which at last was done in great Confusion. but as soon as those in the front knew what was doing in the rear they again pressed forward, and thus the Confusion continued & encreased till we came to the Advanc'd guard of the French, the savages still carrying away Officers, privates, Women and Children, some of which latter they kill'd & scalpt in the road. This horrid scene of blood and slaughter obliged our officers to apply to the Officers of the French Guard for protection, which they refus'd & told them they must take to the woods and shift for themselves which many did, and in all probability many perish't in the woods, many got into Fort Edward that day and others daily Continued coming in, but vastly fatigued with their former hardships added to this last, which threw several of them into Deliriums.”

AFFIDAVIT OF MILES WHITWORTH, SURGEON OF THE MASSACHUSETTS REGIMENT, TAKEN BEFORE GOVERNOR POWNALL 17 OCT. 1757.

Public Record Office. (Extract.)

“Being duly sworn on the Holy Evangelists doth declare . . . that there were also seventeen Men of the Massachusetts Regiment wounded unable to March under his imme-ciate Care in the Intrenched Camp, that according to the Capitulation he did deliver them over to the French Surgeon on the ninth of August at two in the Afternoon . . . that the French Surgeon received them into his Custody and placed Centinals of the French Troops upon the said seventeen wounded. That the French Surgeon going away to the French Camp, the said Miles Whitworth continued with the said wounded Men till five o'Clock on the Morn of the tenth of August, That the Centinals were taken off and that he the said Whitworth saw the French Indians about 5 O'Clock in the Morn of the 10th of August dragg the said seventeen wounded men out of their Hutts, Murder them with their Tomohawks and scalp them, That the French Troops posted round the lines were not further than forty feet from the Hutts where the said wounded Men lay, that several Canadian Officers particularly one Lacorne were present and that none, either Officer or Soldier, protected the said wounded Men.

“MILES WHITWORTH.

“Sworn before me T. POWNALL.”

G.

CHAPTER XX. TICONDEROGA.

THE French accounts of the battle at Ticonderoga are very numerous, and consist of letters and despatches of Montcalm, Lévis, Bougainville, Doreil, and other officers, besides several anonymous narratives, one of which was printed in pamphlet form at the time. Translations of many of them may be found in N. Y. Colonial Documents, X. There are, however, various others preserved in the archives of the War and Marine Departments at Paris which have not seen the light. I have carefully examined and collated them all. The English accounts are by no means so numerous or so minute. Among those not already cited, may be mentioned a letter of Colonel Woolsey of the New York provincials, and two letters from British officers written just after the battle and enclosed in a letter from Alexander Colden to Major Halkett, 17 July. (Bouquet and Haldimand Papers.)

The French greatly exaggerated the force of the English and their losses in the battle. They place the former at from twenty thousand to thirty-one thousand, and the latter at from four thousand to six thousand. Prisoners taken at the end of the battle told them that the English had lost four thousand, — a statement which they readily accepted, though the prisoners could have known little more about the matter than they themselves. And these figures were easily magnified. The number of dead lying before the lines is variously given at from eight hundred to three thousand. Montcalm himself, who was somewhat elated by his victory, gives this last number in one of his letters, though he elsewhere says two thousand; while Lévis, in his Journal de la Guerre, says “about eight hundred.” The truth is that no pains were taken to ascertain the exact number, which, by the English returns, was a little above five hundred, the total of killed, wounded, and missing being nineteen hundred and forty-four. A friend of Knox, writing to him from Fort Edward three weeks after the battle, gives a tabular statement which shows nineteen hundred and fifty in all, or six more than the official report. As the name of every officer killed or wounded, with the corps to which he belonged, was published at the time (London Magazine, 1758), it is extremely unlikely that the official return was falsified. Abercromby’s letter to Pitt, of July 12, says that he retreated “with the loss of four hundred and sixty-four regulars killed, twenty-nine missing eleven hundred and seventeen wounded; and eighty-seven provincials killed, eight missing, and two hundred and thirty-nine wounded, officers of both included.” In a letter to Viscount Barrington, of the same date (Public Record Office), Abercromby encloses a full detail of losses, regiment by regiment and company by company, being a total of nineteen hundred and forty-five. Several of the French writers state correctly that about fourteen thousand men (including reserves) were engaged in the attack; but they add erroneously that there were thirteen thousand more at the Falls. In fact there was only a small provincial regiment left there, and a battalion of the New York regiment, under Colonel Woolsey, at the landing.

A LEGEND OF TICONDEROGA. — Mention has been made of the death of Major Duncan Campbell of Inverawe. The following family tradition relating to it was told me in 1878 by the late Dean Stanley, to whom I am also indebted for various papers on the subject, including a letter from James Campbell, Esq., the present laird of Inverawe, and great-nephew of the hero of the tale. The same story is told, in an amplified form and with some variations, in the Legendary Tales of the Highlands of Sir Thomas Dick Lauder. As related by Dean Stanley and approved by Mr. Campbell, it is this : —

The ancient castle of Inverawe stands by the banks of the Awe, in the midst of the wild and picturesque scenery of the western Highlands. Late one evening, before the middle of the last century, as the laird, Duncan Campbell, sat alone in the old hall, there was a loud knocking at the gate; and, opening it, he saw a stranger, with torn clothing and kilt besmeared with blood, who in a breathless voice begged for asylum. He went on to say that he had killed a man in a fray, and that the pursuers were at his heels. Campbell promised to shelter him. "Swear on your dirk!" said the stranger; and Campbell swore. He then led him to a secret recess in the depths of the castle. Scarcely was he hidden when again there was a loud knocking at the gate, and two armed men appeared. "Your cousin Donald has been murdered, and we are looking for the murderer!"

Campbell, remembering his oath, professed to have no knowledge of the fugitive; and the men went on their way. The laird, in great agitation, lay down to rest in a large dark room, where at length he fell asleep. Waking suddenly in bewilderment and terror, he saw the ghost of the murdered Donald standing by his bedside, and heard a hollow voice pronounce the words: "Inverawe! Inverawe! blood has been shed. Shield not the murderer!" In the morning Campbell went to the hiding-place of the guilty man and told him that he could harbor him no longer. "You have sworn on your dirk!" he replied; and the laird of Inverawe, greatly perplexed and troubled, made a compromise between conflicting duties, promised not to betray his guest, led him to the neighboring mountain, and hid him in a cave.

In the next night, as he lay tossing in feverish slumbers, the same stern voice awoke him, the ghost of his cousin Donald stood again at his bedside, and again he heard the same appalling words: "Inverawe! Inverawe! blood has been shed. Shield not the murderer!" At break of day he hastened, in strange agitation, to the cave; but it was empty, the stranger was gone. At night, as he strove in vain to sleep, the vision appeared once more, ghastly pale, but less stern of aspect than before. "Farewell, Inverawe!" it said; "Farewell, till we meet at TICONDEROGA!"

The strange name dwelt in Campbell's memory. He had joined the Black Watch, or Forty-second Regiment, then employed in keeping order in the turbulent Highlands. In time he became its major; and, a year or two after the war broke out, he went with it to America. Here, to his horror, he learned that it was ordered to the attack of Ticonderoga. His story was well known among his brother officers. They combined among themselves to disarm his fears; and when they reached the fatal spot they told him on the eve of the battle, "This is not Ticonderoga; we are not there yet; this is Fort George." But in the morning he came to them with haggard looks. "I have seen him! You have deceived me! He came to my tent last night! This is Ticonderoga! I shall die to-day!" and his prediction was fulfilled.

Such is the tradition. The indisputable facts are that Major Duncan Campbell of Inverawe, his arm shattered by a bullet, was carried to Fort Edward, where, after amputation, he died and was buried. (Abercromby to Pitt, 19 August, 1758.) The stone that marks his grave may still be seen, with this inscription: "Here lyes the Body of Duncan Campbell of Inverawe, Esq^r, Major to the old Highland Regiment, aged 55 Years, who died the 17th July, 1758, of the Wounds he received in the Attack of the Retrenchment of Ticonderoga or Carrillon, on the 8th July, 1758."

His son, Lieutenant Alexander Campbell, was severely wounded at the same time, but reached Scotland alive, and died in Glasgow.

Mr. Campbell, the present Inverawe, in the letter mentioned above, says that forty-five years ago he knew an old man whose grandfather was foster-brother to the slain major of the forty-second, and who told him the following story while carrying a salmon for him to an inn near Inverawe. The old man's grandfather was sleeping with his son, then a lad, in the same room, but in another bed. This son, father of the narrator, "was awakened," to borrow the words of Mr. Campbell, "by some unaccustomed sound, and behold there was a bright light in the room, and he saw a figure, in full Highland regimentals, cross over the room and stoop down over his father's bed and give him a kiss. He was too frightened to speak, but put his head under his coverlet and went to sleep. Once more he was roused in like manner, and saw the same sight. In the morning he spoke to his father about it, who told him that it was Macdonnochie [the Gaelic patronymic of the laird of Inverawe] whom he had seen, and who came to tell him that he had been killed in a great battle in America. Sure enough, said my informant, it was on the very day that the battle of Ticonderoga was fought and the laird was killed."

It is also said that two ladies of the family of Inverawe saw a battle in the clouds, in which the shadowy forms of Highland warriors were plainly to be descried; and that when the fatal news came from America, it was found that the time of the vision answered exactly to that of the battle in which the head of the family fell.

The legend of Inverawe has within a few years found its way into an English magazine, and it has also been excellently told in the Atlantic Monthly of September of this year, 1884, by Miss C. F. Gordon Cumming. Her version differs a little from that given above from the recital of Dean Stanley and the present laird of Inverawe, but the essential points are the same. Miss Gordon Cumming, however, is in error when she says that Duncan Campbell was wounded in the breast, and that he was first buried at Ticonderoga. His burial-place was near Fort Edward, where he died, and where his remains still lie, though not at the same spot, as they were long after removed by a family named Gilchrist, who claimed kinship with the Campbells of Inverawe.

H.

CHAPTER XXV. WOLFE AT QUEBEC.

FORCE OF THE FRENCH AND ENGLISH AT THE SIEGE OF QUEBEC.

"LES retranchemens que j'avois fait tracer depuis la rivière St. Charles jusqu'au saut Montmorency furent occupés par plus de 14,000 hommes, 200 cavaliers dont je formai un corps aux ordres de M. de la Rochebeaucour, environ 1,000 sauvages Abenakis et des différentes nations du nord des pays d'en haut. M. de Boishébert arriva ensuite avec les Acadiens et sauvages qu'il avoit rassemblés. Je réglai la garnison de Québec à 2,000 hommes." Vaudreuil au Ministre, 5 Oct. 1759.

The commissary Berniers says that the whole force was about fifteen thousand men, besides Indians, which is less than the number given by Vaudreuil.

Bigot says: "Nous avions 13,000 hommes et mille à 1,200 sauvages, sans compter 2,000 hommes de garnison dans la ville." Bigot au Ministre, 25 Oct. 1759.

The Hartwell Journal du Siége says: "Il fut décidé qu'on ne laisseroit dans la place que 1,200 hommes, et que tout le reste marcheroit au camp, où l'on comptoit se trouver plus de 15,000 hommes, y compris les sauvages."

Rigaud, Vaudreuil's brother, writing from Montreal to Bourlamaque on the 23d of June, says: "Je compte que l'armée campée sous Québec sera de 17,000 hommes bien effectifs, sans les sauvages." He then gives a list of Indians who have joined the army, or are on the way, amounting to thirteen hundred.

At the end of June Wolfe had about eight thousand six hundred effective soldiers. Of these the ten battalions, commonly mentioned as regiments, supplied six thousand four hundred; detached grenadiers from Louisbourg, three hundred; artillery, three hundred; rangers, four hundred; light infantry, two hundred; marines, one thousand. The complement of the battalions was in some cases seven hundred and in others one thousand (Knox, II. 25); but their actual strength varied from five hundred to eight hundred, except the Highlanders, who mustered eleven hundred, their ranks being more than full. Fraser, in his Journal of the Siege, gives a tabular view of the whole. At the end of the campaign Lévis reckons the remaining English troops at about six thousand (Lévis au Ministre, 10 Nov. 1759), which answers to the report of General Murray: "The troops will amount to six thousand" (Murray to Pitt, 12 Oct. 1759). The precise number is given in the Return of the State of His Majesty's Forces left in Garrison at Quebec, dated 12

Oct. 1759, and signed, Robert Monckton (Public Record Office, America and West Indies, XCIX.). This shows the total of rank and file to have been 6,214, which the addition of officers, sergeants, and drummers raises to about seven thousand, besides 171 artillerymen.

I.

CHAPTER XXVII. THE HEIGHTS OF ABRAHAM.

ONE of the most important unpublished documents on Wolfe's operations against Quebec is the long and elaborate Journal mémoratif de ce qui s'est passé de plus remarquable pendant qu'a duré le Siège de la Ville de Québec (Archives de la Marine). The writer, M. de Foligny, was a naval officer who during the siege commanded one of the principal batteries of the town. The official correspondence of Vaudreuil for 1759 (Archives Nationales) gives the events of the time from his point of view; and various manuscript letters of Bigot, Lévis, Montreuil, and others (Archives de la Marine, Archives de la Guerre) give additional particulars. The letters, generally private and confidential, written to Bourlamaque by Montcalm, Lévis, Vaudreuil, Malartic, Berniers, and others during the siege contain much that is curious and interesting.

Siège de Québec en 1759, d'après un Manuscrit déposé à la Bibliothèque de Hartwell en Angleterre. A very valuable diary, by a citizen of Quebec; it was brought from England in 1834 by the Hon. D. B. Viger, and a few copies were printed at Quebec in 1836. Journal tenu à l'Armée que commandoit feu M. le Marquis de Montcalm. A minute diary of an officer under Montcalm (printed by the Quebec Historical Society). Mémoire sur la Campagne de 1759, par M. de Joannès, Major de Québec (Archives de la Guerre). Lettres et Dépêches de Montcalm (Ibid.). These touch chiefly the antecedents of the siege. Mémoires sur le Canada depuis 1749 jusqu'à 1760 (Quebec Historical Society). Journal du Siège de Québec en 1759, par M. Jean Claude Panet, notaire (Ibid.). The writer of this diary was in Quebec at the time. Several other journals and letters of persons present at the siege have been printed by the Quebec Historical Society, under the title Événements de la Guerre en Canada durant les Années 1759 et 1760. Relation de ce qui s'est passé au Siège de Québec, par une Religieuse de l'Hôpital Général de Québec (Quebec Historical Society). Jugement impartial sur les Opérations militaires de la Campagne, par M^{re} de Pontbriand, Évêque de Québec (Ibid.). Memoirs of the Siege of Quebec, from the Journal of a French Officer on board the Chezine Frigate, taken by His Majesty's Ship Rippon, by Richard Gardiner, Esq., Captain of Marines in the Rippon, London, 1761.

General Wolfe's Instructions to Young Officers, Philadelphia, 1778. This title is misleading, the book being a collection of military orders. General Orders in Wolfe's Army (Quebec Historical Society). This collection is much more full than the foregoing, so far as concerns the campaign of 1759. Letters of Wolfe (in Wright's Wolfe), Despatches of Wolfe, Saunders, Monckton, and Townshend (in contemporary magazines). A Short Authentic Account of the Expedition against Quebec, by a Volunteer upon that Expedition, Quebec, 1872. This valuable diary is ascribed to James Thompson, a volunteer under Wolfe, who died at Quebec in 1830 at the age of ninety-eight, after holding for many years the position of overseer of works in the Engineer Department. Another manuscript, for the most part identical with this, was found a few years ago among old papers in the office of the Royal Engineers at Quebec. Journal of the Expedition on the River St. Lawrence. Two entirely distinct diaries bear this name. One is printed in the New York Mercury for December, 1759; the other was found among the papers of George Alsopp, secretary to Sir Guy

Carleton, who served under Wolfe (Quebec Historical Society). Johnstone, A Dialogue in Hades (Ibid.). The Scotch Jacobite, Chevalier Johnstone, as aide-de-camp to Lévis, and afterwards to Montcalm, had great opportunities of acquiring information during the campaign; and the results, though produced in the fanciful form of a dialogue between the ghosts of Wolfe and Montcalm, are of substantial historical value. The Dialogue is followed by a plain personal narrative. Fraser, Journal of the Siege of Quebec (Ibid.). Fraser was an officer in the Seventy-eighth Highlanders. Journal of the Siege of Quebec, by a Gentleman in an Eminent Station on the Spot, Dublin, 1759. Journal of the Particular Transactions during the Siege of Quebec (Notes and Queries, XX.). The writer was a soldier or non-commissioned officer serving in the light infantry.

Memoirs of the Siege of Quebec and Total Reduction of Canada, by John Johnson, Clerk and Quarter-master Sergeant to the Fifty-eighth Regiment. A manuscript of 176 pages, written when Johnson was a pensioner at Chelsea (England). The handwriting is exceedingly neat and clear; and the style, though often grandiloquent, is creditable to a writer in his station. This curious production was found among the papers of Thomas McDonough, Esq., formerly British Consul at Boston, and is in possession of his grandson, my relative, George Francis Parkman, Esq., who, by inquiries at the Chelsea Hospital, learned that Johnson was still living in 1802.

I have read and collated with extreme care all the above authorities, with others which need not be mentioned.

Among several manuscript maps and plans showing the operations of the siege may be mentioned one entitled, Plan of the Town and Basin of Quebec and Part of the Adjacent Country, shewing the principal Encampments and Works of the British Army commanded by Major Genl Wolfe, and those of the French Army by Lieut. Genl the Marquis of Montcalm. It is the work of three engineers of Wolfe's army, and is on a scale of eight hundred feet to an inch. A fac-simile from the original in possession of the Royal Engineers is before me.

Among the "King's Maps," British Museum (CXIX. 27), is a very large colored plan of operations at Quebec in 1759, 1760, superbly executed in minute detail.

J.

CHAPTER XXVIII. FALL OF QUEBEC.

Death and Burial of Montcalm. — Johnstone, who had every means of knowing the facts, says that Montcalm was carried after his wound to the house of the surgeon Arnoux. Yet it is not quite certain that he died there. According to Knox, his death took place at the General Hospital; according to the modern author of the Ursulines de Québec, at the Château St.-Louis. But the General Hospital was a mile out of the town, and in momentary danger of capture by the English; while the Château had been made untenable by the batteries of Point Levi, being immediately exposed to their fire. Neither of these places was one to which the dying general was likely to be removed, and it is probable that he was suffered to die in peace at the house of the surgeon.

It has been said that the story of the burial of Montcalm in a grave partially formed by the explosion of a bomb, rests only on the assertion in his epitaph, composed in 1761 by the Academy of Inscriptions at the instance of Bougainville. There is, however, other evidence of the fact. The naval captain Foligny, writing on the spot at the time of the burial, says in his Diary, under date of September 14: "A huit heures du soir, dans l'église des Ursulines, fut enterré dans une fosse faite sous la chaire par le travail de la Bombe, M. le Marquis de Montcalm, décédé du matin à 4 heures après avoir reçu tous les Sacrements. Jamais Général n'avoit été plus aimé de sa troupe et plus universellement regretté. Il étoit d'un esprit supérieur, doux, gracieux, affable, familier à tout le monde, ce qui lui avoit fait gagner la confiance de toute la Colonie: requiescat in pace."

The author of Les Ursulines de Québec says: "Un des projectiles ayant fait une large ouverture dans le plancher de bas, on en profita pour creuser la fosse du général."

The Boston Post Boy and Advertiser, in its issue of Dec. 3, 1759, contains a letter from "an officer of distinction" at Quebec to Messrs. Green and Russell, proprietors of the newspaper. This letter contains the following words: "He [Montcalm] died the next day; and, with a little Improvement, one of our 13-inch Shell-Holes served him for a Grave."

The particulars of his burial are from the Acte Mortuaire du Marquis de Montcalm in the registers of the Church of Notre Dame de Québec, and from that valuable chronicle, Les Ursulines de Québec, composed by the Superior of the convent. A nun of the sisterhood, Mère Aimable Dubé de Saint-Ignace, was, when a child, a witness of the scene, and preserved a vivid memory of it to the age of eighty-one.

K.

CHAPTER XXIX. SAINTE-FOY.

STRENGTH OF THE FRENCH AND ENGLISH AT THE BATTLE OF STE.-FOY.

IN the Public Record Office (America and West Indies, XCIX.) are preserved the tabular returns of the garrison of Quebec for 1759, 1760, sent by Murray to the War Office. They show the exact condition of each regiment, in all ranks, for every month of the autumn, winter, and spring. The return made out on the 24th of April, four days before the battle, shows that the total number of rank and file, exclusive of non-commissioned officers and drummers, was 6,808, of whom 2,612 were fit for duty in Quebec, and 654 at other places in Canada; that is, at Ste.-Foy, Old Lorette, and the other outposts. This gives a total of 3,266 rank and file fit for duty at or near Quebec; besides which there were between one hundred and two hundred artillerymen, and a company of rangers. This was Murray's whole available force at the time. Of the rest of the 6,808 who appear in the return, 2,299 were invalids at Quebec, and 669 in New York; 538 were on service in Halifax and New York, and 36 were absent on furlough. These figures nearly answer to the condensed statement of Fraser, and confirm the various English statements of the numbers that took part in the battle; namely, 3,140 (Knox), 3,000 (John Johnson), 3,111, and elsewhere, in round numbers, 3,000 (Murray). Lévis, with natural exaggeration, says 4,000. Three or four hundred were left in Quebec to guard the walls when the rest marched out.

I have been thus particular because a Canadian writer, Garneau, says: "Murray sortit de la ville le 28 au matin à la tête de toute la garnison, dont les seules troupes de la ligne comptaient encore 7,714 combattants, non compris les officiers." To prove this, he cites the pay-roll of the garrison; which, in fact, corresponds to the returns of the same date, if non-commissioned officers, drummers, and artillerymen are counted with the rank and file. But Garneau falls into a double error. He assumes, first, that there were no men on the sick list; and secondly, that there were none absent from Quebec; when in reality, as the returns show, considerably more than half were in one or the other of these categories. The pay-rolls were made out at the headquarters of each corps, and always included the entire number of men enlisted in it, whether sick or well, present or absent. On the same fallacious premises Garneau affirms that Wolfe, at the battle on the Plains of Abraham, had eight thousand soldiers, or, a little less than double his actual force.

Having stated, as above, that Murray marched out of Quebec with at least 7,714 effective troops, Garneau, not very consistently, goes on to say that he advanced against Lévis with six thousand or seven thousand men; and he adds that the two armies were about equal, because Lévis had left some détachments behind to guard his boats and artillery. The number of the French, after they had all reached the field, was, in truth, about seven thousand; at the beginning of the fight it seems not to have exceeded five thousand. The Relation de la seconde Bataille de Québec says: "Notre petite armée consistoit au moment de l'action en 3,000 hommes de troupes réglées et 2,000 Canadiens ou sauvages." A large number of Canadians came up from Sillery while the affair went on; and as the whole French army, except the detachments mentioned by Garneau, had passed the night at no greater distance from the field than Ste.-Foy and Sillery, the last man must have reached it before the firing was half over.

INDEX.

INDEX.

A.

- Abenakis, the, i. 23, 40, 209, 480; settled in Canada, i. 23; at Fort Duquesne, i. 154; assist the Canadian militia, i. 371, 372; called to a council of war by Montcalm, i. 485-489; position of the English at Fort William Henry, i. 499; the massacre at Fort William Henry (see William Henry, Fort), i. 510-513, ii. 428-431; evidence concerning the massacre, i. 514 note; their conversion to Christianity, i. 514 note; seize the messengers of Amherst, ii. 251; Rogers sent to destroy one of their towns, ii. 251, 253-258 note; their cruelty, ii. 253, 255; the St. Francis settlement, ii. 253, 254; statistics of warriors at the siege of Quebec, ii. 436, 437.
- Abercromby, General James, i. 165 note; to supersede Webb in command of the army, i. 383; to resign in favor of Earl Loudon, i. 383; arrives at Albany, i. 399; sends a letter of approbation to Rogers, i. 445; Loudon recalled from office, ii. 48; succeeds Loudon in command, ii. 48; to lead the expedition against Louisbourg, ii. 48; Amherst prevented from co-operation with, ii. 75; the rejoicing at the fall of Louisbourg, ii. 76, 77; Amherst plans to assist him at Lake George, ii. 80; expedition led by, against Ticonderoga, ii. 85-113 note; his camp at Lake George, ii. 88; his leadership, ii. 89, 240; number of his troops, ii. 88, 89; his opinion of Lord Howe, ii. 89; statistics of the expedition against Ticonderoga, ii. 91, 92, 431-433; the passage of Lake George, ii. 92-94; the army lost in the woods, ii. 95; effect of the death of Lord Howe upon his army, ii. 97, 98; the army reaches the Falls, ii. 98, 99; statements concerning the French defences, ii. 100, 101; different courses of action open to, ii. 101, 102; the eve of battle, ii. 103, 104; order of the assault, ii. 105-107; his encounter with Montcalm at Ticonderoga, ii. 106-110; his retreat, ii. 110, 111, 114, 115, 165, 238; his losses, ii. 110, 432, 433; a disgraceful order sent to Colonel Cummings, ii. 114; nickname given to, by the Provincials, ii. 115; visited by the chaplains, ii. 117; sends a war-party into the woods, ii. 121-123; despatches Bradstreet to capture Fort Frontenac, ii. 127; receives news of the fall of Fort Frontenac, ii. 127; Fort Frontenac dismantled, ii. 129; joined by Amherst, ii. 129; his camp broken up, ii. 130; neglects to assist Forbes's army, ii. 157; Amherst's superior leadership, ii. 240; his letter to Pitt, ii. 432.
- Abraham an Indian, i. 174.
- Abraham Martin, his name given to the Heights of Abraham, ii. 289.
- Abraham, the Heights of, ii. 259, 408, 438-441; Wolfe discovers a path ascending the cliff, ii. 272, 273; general belief in the safety of the heights, ii. 275, 276; ascent of the troops under Wolfe's direction, ii. 281, 287; statistics concerning Wolfe's army, and the action upon, ii. 438-441.
- Abraham, the Plains of, ii. 200, 298 note, 327, 357; inaccessibility of, ii. 260; Guienne's troops not at their post, ii. 285; origin of the name, and description of, ii. 289; the fall of Quebec, ii. 302-324, 325 note, 326 note, 444.
- Acadia, i. 178, 486; population of, i. 20, 94, 124, 264, 284; attacks made on New England, i. 28; questions of boundary, i. 90, 122-128, 184, 236-

- 238, 259; conquest of, by Nicholson in 1710, i. 90; conditions of residence for French subjects, i. 90, 91; conflict for, i. 90-127; English power in, i. 92; the naval station at Chebucto, i. 92, 93; ceded to England by France, i. 93, 94; determination of the French to recover it, i. 93-95; six principal parishes of, i. 94; documents on the affairs of, i. 94-96; religion, priests, and government of, i. 94, 99, 100, 107, 259, 260, attention given by Count Raymond to the affairs of, i. 102; wretched condition of the emigrants from, i. 109, 110; Joseph Le Loutre, the vicar-general of, i. 113; Beaubassin occupied by the English, i. 115-120; emigration encouraged by the French, i. 116; the question of French or English ownership, i. 123, 124, 184, 236, 239, ii. 405; need of communication between Quebec and Cape Breton, i. 123; the census of, i. 124; expedition against, to be led by Lieutenant-Colonel Monckton, i. 194; sad condition of the people of, i. 234, 235; the French use the inhabitants to carry on their war-parties, i. 235; questions of policy for the French and English in Acadia, i. 236-241; probability of French invasion, i. 237; importance of her harbors, i. 237; arrival of the English troops, i. 246, 247; conditions leading to the expulsion of the inhabitants from, i. 253-266; removal of the inhabitants from their homes, i. 255, 266-284; encampment of the New England troops, i. 269, 270; tour of inspection made by Winslow, i. 271; arrival of the vessels of transport at Nova Scotia, i. 276; arrival of Saul with provisions, i. 278, 279; embarkation of the Acadians, i. 279-281; return of a portion of the exiles, i. 283; the act of expatriation criticised, i. 284; families of British stock settle in, i. 284; capture of forts by the English, i. 328; plans of Vaudreuil for conquest, ii. 178.
- Acadians, the, i. 93; religious privileges accorded to, by the treaty of Utrecht, i. 91, 256; required to take the oath of allegiance to England, i. 91, 92, 235, 260; influence of the French upon, i. 91, 93-124, 235-237, 242-245; their religion, i. 91, 95, 259, 260, 281; their hostility to the English encouraged by the French priests, i. 91, 98-107, 109, 113, 114, 121, 122, 235, 236, 238, 257, 259, 260, 262, 264, ii. 419-421; the war of 1745, i. 92; form of the oath of allegiance, i. 92 note, 265; their condition and numbers from 1748 to 1752, i. 93, 94; official papers relating to, i. 94-96; taught to love France, and to call themselves French subjects, i. 94, 235, 237, 243, 245, 253, 257; treatment received from the English, and mildness of their rule, i. 95-97, 235, 236, 261, ii. 418, 419; quotations from Roma, alluding to, i. 96, 97; their fear of the Indians, i. 96, 108, 114, 235; join the Indian war-parties of the French against the English, i. 97, 103, 104, 262, 264, 275, ii. 419-421; their neutrality, i. 97, 258; their oath of allegiance to be made more binding, i. 97, 98; deputies sent to meet Cornwallis at Halifax, i. 97, 98; their refusal to take an unqualified oath of allegiance to George II., i. 97, 98; promise good behavior and a reasonable compliance, i. 98; order of Cornwallis issued to, concerning the oath, i. 98, 99; plans of the French to recover their possessions, i. 98-100; their covert war, i. 99-105; advised by Desherbiers and others to refuse the oath of allegiance, i. 101, 106; letters from French officials showing their secret work against the English, i. 101; encouraged by the French to emigrate to French lands, i. 102, 108-110; testimony of Prévoost concerning, i. 105; cruelly and dishonorably treated by the priest Le Loutre, i. 108-110, 113-122, 235-238, 242-245, ii. 420, 421; wretchedness of the emigrants after leaving their English farms, i. 109, 110, 119, 120-122, 235-238, 243-245, 265, 266; speech of Cornwallis to the deputies, i. 110, 111, 112; treatment received from Hopson, i. 112, 113; French method of terrifying, by using the Micmacs, i. 113, 114; occupation of Beaubassin by the English, i. 115-120; disaffection among, i. 116; forcibly removed by the French from Beaubassin, and obliged to live on French ground, i. 116; the murder of Captain Howe, i. 118, 119; a French fort to be built on Beau-séjour, i. 119, 120; ordered to swear allegiance to France, i. 120, 121; contest between French and English, i. 120-122; proclamation of Lawrence concerning, i. 121; absurd demands of Le Loutre, i. 121; a portion of the inhabitants cross the French lines, i. 121; their suffering inside the French lines, i. 121, 122, 244, 245; plans of Shirley to send away from Acadia all French settlers, i. 234, 257; a portion of the people transported to French settlements, i. 235, 235 note; fears of the English, i. 239-241; supplies sent to the emigrants, i. 242; their supplies stolen by the officials, i. 242; plans of Le Loutre for the emigrants, i. 243, 244; false statements of Le Loutre, i. 244; prevented by Le Loutre from appealing to Duquesne, i. 244; harsh treatment received from Governor Duquesne, i. 244, 245; desire of, to return to their English allegiance, i. 244, 245; an annoyance to the English, i. 245; dealt with by the French with heartlessness, i. 245; their terror upon the arrival of the English troops, i. 247; disloyalty of, i. 248, 257, 258; join the French garrison, i. 248; the siege of Beauséjour by the English, i. 248-253, 260; assisted by Le Loutre at Beauséjour, i. 250; capitulation of Beauséjour, i. 251; condition leading to the expulsion of, from Acadia, i. 253-266; ordered by Monckton to meet him at Beauséjour, i. 254; sentence pronounced upon, by Monckton, and prisoners taken at Fort Cumberland, i. 254, 255, 266; explanation of the imprisonment of, i. 255-266; prevented by the priests from joining the English, i. 255; again ordered to take the oath of allegiance, i. 255; demands made by the priests with regard to their return to their home, i. 255, 256; refuse to take the oath of allegiance to England, i. 256; instruction sent to Governor Lawrence with regard to, i. 257; to be compelled to take the oath of allegiance, i. 257; desire of Shirley to expel from the country, i. 257; their country commonly considered an Arcadia, i. 258; depicted by Abbé Raynal, i. 258; their means and mode of living, i. 258-260; their population, i. 259; their houses, i. 259, 268; their food, i. 259; their furniture, i. 259; their animals, i. 259; their clothing, i. 259; marriages among, i. 259, 260; their village life, i. 259, 260; their priests, religion, and government, i. 259, 260; only a few take the required oath, i. 260; the priests assist the French Bishop and Governor of Canada, i. 260; loyal to Louis XV., and untrue to George II., 260, 264; described by Dieréville, i. 260 note; the oath of allegiance administered by Governor Lawrence, i. 260; emigration of a small number of, to Cape Breton, i. 260; they return, and take the oath of allegiance, i. 260; kind treatment vouchsafed to the loyal inhabitants, i. 260; memorial brought by, to Captain Murray, i. 260-263; contents of their memorial sent to Governor Lawrence, i. 260-263; their insolence, i. 261; ordered to take the oath of allegiance to England, or to leave the country, i. 263, 264; again refuse the oath of allegiance, i. 264; declare their preference to lose their lands, i. 264; plans of removal discussed by the English, i. 265, 266, resolution to remove the people from their country, i. 265, 266; instructions quoted with regard to the removal of, i. 266, 267; instrumentality of the priests in the expulsion of, i. 265, 266, 266 note; removal of, by the English, from their homes, i. 266-284; summoned to meet Winslow to hear the orders of George II., i. 271-274; meet Winslow in the church at Grand Pré, i. 272-274, 276; declared prisoners of the King, i. 274; unite with the Indians to attack the English, i. 275; number in charge of Winslow, i. 276; arrival of the transports, i. 276; detention of, on the vessels, i. 276, 277, 277 note; supplies for the prisoners delayed, i. 278, 279; cases of the separation of families, i. 279, 280; removal of, described, i. 279-282; effort of the prisoners to escape, i. 280; number of, embarked for the colonies, i. 280-282; guerilla warfare against the English, i. 282; distribution of the exiles, i. 282; treatment received in the colonies, i. 282; heartless outrages practised upon, in Canada, i. 282, 283, ii. 26; exiles on one of the vessels escape to the St. John, i. 282; sent to France, i. 283; sent to England, i. 283; progenitors of the present race, i. 283; death of, i. 283; arrival of the exiles in Louisiana, i. 283; at the siege of Louisbourg, ii. 62, 66; false dealing of, Boishébert, ii. 170; their hostility to the English, ii. 181.

Achilles, i. 353; ii. 184.

Acts of Parliament. See Parliament.

Adams, a wagoner, carries a letter of

- warning to Fort Lyman, i. 296; shot by the Indians, i. 299.
- Adams, Captain, i. 249, 270, 272; removal of the Acadians, i. 267, 270, 276, 277, 280 note.
- Adams, Parson, i. 6.
- Adirondacks, i. 453.
- Admiralty, the position held by Anson, i. 179.
- Admiralty, Lords of the, citation from letters to, i. 181.
- Africa, ii. 44, 49; the French driven from Guinea, ii. 47; the power of England over, ii. 400; France cedes Senegal, ii. 406.
- Aigues Mortes, dungeons of, i. 21.
- Aix-la-Chapelle, the treaty of, i. 9, 19, 36, 43, 94, 359, 360, ii. 53, 406; questions of boundary to be settled by commissioners, i. 122-128.
- Alais, i. 455.
- Albany, i. 28, 65, 171, 233, 289, 290, 298, 310, 326, 403, 421, 435, 452, ii. 91, 93; conservatism of, in the eighteenth century, i. 33; meeting of Indians and commissioners, i. 61; news sent to, of the death of Lord Howe, ii. 98; advance of Bradstreet, ii. 129; congress of Indians and English held, i. 172-176; plan of Franklin for colonial union, i. 175; the Dutch at, i. 193, 320; decisions of the council, i. 194, 195; described by Mrs. Grant, i. 319, 320; the base of military operations, i. 319, 320; headquarters of Shirley, i. 384, 393; the Indians misled by the traders, i. 390; plans of Vaudreuil, i. 393, 394; return of Bradstreet, i. 395, 396; arrival of Webb and Abercromby, i. 399; rumors of danger from the enemy, i. 415, 475, ii. 3.
- Albemarle, Lord, Governor of Virginia, i. 105 note, 137; English ambassador at Versailles, i. 180; his death, i. 184.
- Albemarle, Earl of, expedition of, ii. 401, 402.
- "Alcide," the, i. 185.
- Alembert, D', i. 16.
- Alequippa, Queen, i. 151; flies from her possessions, i. 45.
- Alexander, ii. 408.
- Alexandria, i. 142, 162, 247; camp of Braddock at, i. 191; council held at the camp, i. 196 note, 234, 241, 286.
- Algonquins, or Algonkins, the, i. 74; at Fort Duquesne, i. 154; assist the Canadian militia, i. 372; their means of divination, i. 438 note; called to a council by Montcalm, i. 485-489.
- Alleghany Mountains, the, i. 20, 40, 59, 124, 125, 127, 145, 148, 161, 372, ii. 130, 133, 141; crossed by the English traders, i. 42; road made through, by Braddock's forces, i. 205, ii. 138, 141; condition of the settlers, i. 335.
- Alleghany River, the, i. 39, 128, 133, 136, 143, 207, 222, 223, 423, 424, ii. 149, 152, 154, 159; work of Céloron de Bienville, i. 43; settlement of Shenango, i. 46; a fort planned, i. 130.
- Allen, Ensign, to train the Provincials in Braddock's expedition, i. 200, 201.
- Allen, Chief Justice, letter from Bouquet quoted, ii. 161, 161 note.
- Alsopp, George, ii. 439.
- Alva, ii. 404.
- Amalek, ii. 89.
- America, i. 202, 219 note, 230 note, 251, 295, 360, 369, 383, ii. 45, 49, 191, 271, 391, 401; conditions during, and results following, the Seven Years War in Europe, i. 1, 20; complication of political interests, i. 1, 3, 4; the War of Independence, i. 1; the British and French possessions compared, i. 1-3; British soldiers in, i. 9; number of French and English inhabitants in the middle of the eighteenth century, i. 20; towns and colonies compared and contrasted, i. 25-36; plan for the increase of French settlements, i. 37; questions of boundaries, i. 37, 43, 76, 79, 86, 122-128; commissioners appointed to decide upon French and English possessions in, i. 123-127; the balance of power, i. 126; conditions in the English colonies, i. 160-171; results of the meeting of the colonial Assemblies with their governors, i. 163-169; France and England compared, i. 181; the policy of England, i. 181; regiments ordered to, from England, i. 181, 182; expedition ordered to, from France, i. 182, 183; council of American governors held with Braddock, i. 191-195; the democracy of Pennsylvania, i. 388; holds a secondary place in the interests of France, i. 355; conflict of the eighteenth century, i. 355; French power in, to be sustained, i. 356, 414; money granted by Parliament to the colonies, i. 382, 382 note; usefulness of Indian warriors, i. 484; the power of Pitt, ii. 43, 44; interest felt for, by Pitt, ii. 47-49; prophecy of John Mellen, ii. 378;

- and of the French and English war, ii. 378-382, 386; predictions concerning the future of the British colonies, ii. 403, 404.
- American Antiquarian Society, the, i. 48; plate buried by the French in the possession of, i. 48; Transactions of, i. 48.
- Amherst, Lieutenant-Colonel, recaptures St. John's, ii. 402.
- Amherst, Jeffrey, ii. 194 note, 231, 339; recalled from the German war, ii. 48; his character, ii. 48; promoted to be major-general, ii. 48; takes command of the expedition against Louisbourg, ii. 48, 49, 51, 56-81; plans of attack, ii. 57, 58; lands his troops at Freshwater Cove, ii. 57-60; his camp, ii. 61; roads made through marshes, ii. 61, 62; courtesies between the commanders, ii. 64, 65; his humanity, ii. 70, 70 note, 374; terms of capitulation extended to Louisbourg, ii. 71, 72; capitulation of Louisbourg, ii. 74, 75, 75 note; prevented from uniting with Abercromby, ii. 75; increases his conquests, ii. 78; action after the reduction of Louisbourg, ii. 79, 80; orders issued to Wolfe, ii. 80, 81; evidences concerning the siege of Louisbourg, ii. 81 note; joins Abercromby at Lake George, ii. 129; letter sent to, from General Forbes, ii. 161; his army moves against Ticonderoga, ii. 197, 210, 222; his ability to render aid to Wolfe, ii. 210, 212; commander-in-chief of the troops in America, ii. 235; plans of Pitt for his movements, ii. 235, 236; deputed Prideaux to take charge of the expedition against Niagara, ii. 235, 236; the capture of Ticonderoga, ii. 235-241; on Lake George, ii. 235, 236; forts built by, ii. 237; Bourlamaque retires before, ii. 238, 239; Ticonderoga blown up by the French, ii. 239; advances upon Crown Point, ii. 240, 241; his delay in joining Wolfe, ii. 240-242, 249, 250, 272, 323; Crown Point rebuilt by, ii. 240, 241; roads built by, across Vermont, ii. 241; his navy, ii. 241, 242, 251, 252; at Crown Point, ii. 249; tries to pacify the Abenakis, ii. 251; sends Major Rogers to destroy the Abenakis' town, ii. 251, 253; unsuccessful attempt to reach Isle-aux-Noix, ii. 251, 252; the result of his campaign, ii. 252, 253; desired to send supplies to Rogers, ii. 254, 256, 257;
- Lieutenant Stephen sent to meet Rogers' rangers, ii. 256, 257; letter from Rogers, ii. 258 note; defers his advance upon Montreal, ii. 265; his plans, ii. 361; the fall of Canada, ii. 361-382; his army embarks for Montreal, ii. 369; the "Ottawa" captured, ii. 369; attacks Fort Lévis, ii. 369, 370; passage of the rapids, ii. 370, 371; encamps near Montreal, ii. 371; number of his troops, ii. 372, 372 note; a council of war held by Vaudreuil, ii. 372; articles of capitulation insisted upon by Amherst, ii. 372-374; his detestation of French cruelty, ii. 373; Vaudreuil obliged to surrender Montreal, ii. 376; the news of his victory received in Boston, ii. 377-379; sends his brother to recapture St. John's, ii. 402.
- Amonoesuc River, the, ii. 256, 257.
- Anastase, i. 209.
- Anastase, Father, i. 209.
- Anbury, the traveller, ii. 426.
- Ange, Gardien L', landing of the English before, ii. 217; burned by order of Wolfe, ii. 261.
- Anglican Church, the, in New York, i. 32.
- Anglicans, the, i. 29.
- Anglo-Saxon race, the, i. 25.
- Annapolis, Acadia, i. 92, 106, 178, 241, 279; garrison at, i. 92, 93; parish of, i. 94; Acadians encouraged to emigrate from, i. 108, 109; the inhabitants of the valley, i. 235; French feeling in the hearts of the inhabitants, i. 237; arrival of the English force, i. 247; means of living practised by the Acadians, i. 258, 259; number of Acadians sent away in the vessels, i. 280; isolation of the garrison at, ii. 77; rejoicing at the fall of Louisbourg, ii. 77, 78.
- Anne, Fort, ii. 121.
- Anse du Foulon, ii. 276, 284, 286, 344, 346, 347, 354; now called Wolfe's Cove, ii. 278.
- Anson, First Lord of the Admiralty, i. 179, ii. 50.
- Anthony, D', lieutenant-colonel, sent to the English concerning the terms of capitulation for Louisbourg, ii. 71; empowered to accept the capitulation for Louisbourg, ii. 73, 74.
- "Apollon," the number of her guns, ii. 54 note.
- Appendix A., ii. 417, 418; references to, i. 67 note, 68 note, 78 note.
- Appendix B., ii. 418-421; references to, i. 100 note, 104 note, 127 note.

- Appendix C. ii. 421-423; references to, i. 158 note, 161 note.
 Appendix D., ii. 423-426; references to, i. 208 note, 215 note.
 Appendix E., ii. 426-428.
 Appendix F., ii. 428-431.
 Appendix G., ii. 431-436; references to, ii. 93 note, 113 note.
 Appendix H., ii. 436-438.
 Appendix I., reference to, ii. 298 note.
 Appendix J., ii. 438-441, 442; reference to, ii. 326 note.
 Appendix K., ii. 442-444; reference to, ii. 359.
 Appleton, Nathaniel, his utterance after the fall of Canada, ii. 379.
 Aphorp, a Boston merchant, i. 245; furnishes money for the English troops, i. 245.
 Arbuthnot, William, his attestation, i. 505 note.
 Arcadia, i. 258.
 "Aréthuse," the, ii. 63; number of her guns, ii. 54 note; fires upon the English, ii. 64; withdrawn from her position, ii. 65.
 Argens, D', letters from Frederic II., ii. 387-389.
 Argenson, D', Minister of War, 1743-1747, i. 15, 355, 367, ii. 44; writes to Montcalm of his appointment, i. 360; letter to, from Montcalm, i. 377; reinforcements sent to Canada, i. 467, 468.
 Armstrong, Colonel George, i. 423, ii. 158; the attack upon Kittanning, i. 423-427; receives a medal from the Council of Philadelphia, i. 426.
 Army, the English, matters pertaining to the troops, i. 383-387; discipline in, ii. 119. See English.
 Army, the French, description of French troops, i. 368-373; number of troops in Canada, i. 368, 368 note. See French.
 Army, the Provincial, i. 290, 291; manners and morals of, i. 292; preaching on Sunday to, i. 295, 296.
 Army chaplains, ii. 116, 117.
 Arnoux, Surgeon, ii. 308; Montcalm carried to his house, ii. 308, 441.
 Arthur's Club, i. 7.
 Artillery Cove, i. 498.
 Artois, battalion of, i. 368. ii. 54, 73; ordered to America, i. 182.
 Ashley, Dr., his death, ii. 120.
 Ashley, John, difficulties among the war committees, i. 387.
 Asia, diplomatic and political position of France and England towards, i. 3, 4; the power of England over, ii. 400.
 Assemblies of the English colonies, the, neglect their own interests, i. 86; instructions from the Lords of Trade, i. 172, 173; matters to be laid before, i. 195. •
 Assembly of Massachusetts, the, dealings of Governor Shirley with, i. 168, 169; grants money to aid the English in Maine, i. 169; plans of Shirley laid before, i. 241; money and supplies voted by, for the expedition against Crown Point, i. 285, 286.
 Assembly of New York, the, i. 59; quotation from Governor Clinton concerning their neglect in protecting Indian trade, i. 61, 62; apathy of, i. 73; address of, to Lieutenant-Governor Delancey, cited, i. 168; results of the meeting of, with the Governor of New York, i. 168, 169; its hostility to Johnson, i. 328; political difficulties, i. 350.
 Assembly of Pennsylvania, the, i. 59, 141, 142, 426; refuses the request of the Indians to build a trading-house on the Ohio, i. 60; unwilling to aid Dinwiddie, i. 142; letter from the Earl of Holderness laid before, i. 165; persons composing, i. 165, 166; result of the meeting with the Governor, i. 165-168; quarrels with the Governor, i. 191, 340-342, 348, 349, 350 note, 351 note, ii. 131, 135; needs of the people laid before, i. 336; causes of military paralysis, i. 337, 338; question of taxing proprietary lands, i. 337-341, 344-347; Benjamin Franklin leader in, i. 338; relations of, with the people, i. 339-350; relations of with Governor Morris, i. 339-350; contentions with the Quakers and the Governor, i. 340, 341; desires to issue bills of credit, i. 344-346; the paper called a "Representation" sent to the House, i. 346; anger of the Quakers, i. 346, 347; deputations from the people and from friendly Indians seeking aid, i. 347; growing unpopularity of, i. 347, 348; a militia law passed, i. 248; the proprietaries of Pennsylvania offer to raise money for defence, i. 349; difficulties in quartering the troops, i. 439, 440.
 Assembly of Virginia, i. 137; efforts of Dinwiddie to repel the French in the West, i. 137-140; aid voted to Dinwiddie, i. 139, 140, 233; slowness of movement of, i. 144; speech of Dinwiddie to, i. 163, 164, 165; result of the meeting with Dinwiddie, i. 165, 233; the distress of the people, i. 332, 333; the needs of Washington, i. 332, 333; needs of the people laid before, i. 336.

Atlantic Ocean, the, i. 4, 87, 123, 205, 469, ii. 176, 412; the United States, ii. 413; English possessions bordering on, i. 20.

Attiqué, village of, i. 45; French name of Kittanning, i. 426. See Kittanning.

Aubry, ii. 244; the engagement at Niagara, ii. 244-249; taken prisoner, ii. 248.

Augsburg, ii. 394.

Augusta, Fort, ii. 147.

"Auguste," fate of the, ii. 384, 385.

Augustus the Strong, i. 10.

Aulac, inhabitants removed from, i. 255; the declaration of Monckton, i. 254.

Austria, effects of the French alliance, i. 2; succession of Maria Theresa, i. 18; political alliances sought, i. 353, 354; a Catholic country, i. 355; troops sent against, i. 363; position of affairs in Europe, ii. 38, 39; policy of George III., ii. 393; hostile to Prussia, ii. 399; the treaty of Hubertsburg, ii. 407.

Austria, House of, its rule, i. 16, 17; enmity of France towards, i. 19.

Austrian Succession, the war of, i. 19.

Austrians, the, ii. 40; the battle of Prague, ii. 39; routed at Leuthen, ii. 46; fly before Frederic, ii. 386.

Auxerrois, i. 359.

Avery, Ensign, the expedition against the Abenakis, ii. 255-257.

Avon River, the former name of, i. 268.

Awe River, the, ii. 433.

B.

Babirole, i. 354.

Baby, a Canadian officer, i. 330 note.

Babylon, ii. 89, 378, 384.

Bagley, Colonel Jonathan, ii. 76, 77, 115, 117; commands at Fort William Henry, i. 388; preparations for attacking Ticonderoga, i. 388, 389; extracts from his letters, i. 389.

Bahama Islands, the, i. 421.

Baker, a soldier, i. 424.

Bald Mountain, i. 477.

Ball, a dog, ii. 189.

Ballads, ii. 233 note.

Barachois, ii. 63, 67; approach of the English, ii. 64.

Barbadoes, Island of, ii. 190.

Barnsley, Thomas, ii. 124 note.

Barre, ii. 46, 268.

Barrington, Viscount, ii. 398, 432; replaces Chancellor Legge, ii. 393.

Bassignac, De, curious incident in the attack on Montcalm, at Ticonderoga, ii. 107.

Bastille, the, i. 15, ii. 385.

Bath, Lady, i. 189.

Bath, Lord, ii. 404 note.

Bath, England, i. 7, 188, 311, ii. 190.

Batiscan, i. 371, ii. 332.

Bavaria, the Elector of, i. 19.

Béarn, the battalion of, i. 374, ii. 104, 109, 230; ordered to America, i. 182; uniform of the battalion of, i. 368 note; encamped before Niagara, i. 376; capture of Oswego, i. 408; preparations to attack Fort William Henry, i. 477; advance of Montcalm upon Fort William Henry, i. 491; mutiny at Montreal, ii. 10; attack upon Quebec, ii. 292.

Beaubassin, Madame de, suppers given by, i. 458.

Beaubassin, i. 94; English occupation of, i. 115, 116-120; the parish fired by Le Loutre, i. 116; departure of Major Lawrence from, and return of, i. 116, 117.

Beauce, i. 76.

Beauchamp, merchant, i. 271.

Beaucour, La Roche, i. 457, ii. 428.

Beaujeu, Captain, at Fort Duquesne, i. 208, ii. 423; encounter of the French with the English, i. 210-227; death of, i. 215.

Beaumont, ii. 225.

Beauport, the village of, ii. 200, 212, 228, 265, 274, 303; Montcalm stations his camp here at the siege of Quebec, ii. 200, 201, 208, 209, 292, 298 note, 305; attack of Wolfe on the French camp, ii. 230-233; approach of Wolfe's fleet, ii. 282, 288; flight of the French army, ii. 300-302, 307; the French supplies plundered, ii. 311; return of the army to Quebec, ii. 313.

Beauport, River of, ii. 201, 208, 209.

Beauséjour, Fort, i. 122, ii. 181; erected by the French, i. 119, 120, 235; an attack upon, planned by the English, i. 192-194, 196, 236, 239, 241, 245; strength of the fort, i. 238, 241; M. Vergór commandant of, i. 239, 241, 242; official corruption at, i. 242, 243, 245, 250, 251; encounter

- of the French with the English, i. 247-253, 260; capitulation offered by the French, i. 251; escape of Le Loutre, i. 252; capture of, i. 253, 256, ii. 193, 278; became Fort Cumberland, i. 253; encampment of Monckton, i. 254; the declaration of Monckton, i. 254; inhabitants removed from, i. 255; departure of Winslow from, i. 267.
- Beauséjour, hill, i. 116, 118.
- Beaver, King, Indian chief, ii. 145.
- Beaver. See Fur-trade.
- Beaver Creek, ii. 145.
- Becancour, M. de, i. 71.
- Becancour, i. 485.
- Bedford, Duke of, ii. 393; sent to Paris to negotiate for peace, ii. 403.
- Bedford, Fort, erection of, ii. 141.
- Bedford, town of, ii. 133.
- Belcher, Governor of New Jersey, i. 392; declares war against the Indians, i. 392; postpones his action, i. 393.
- Belêtre conducts a war-party, i. 74; the attack at German Flats, ii. 6, 7.
- Belknap, his "History of New Hampshire" cited, i. 510 note.
- Bellamy, George Anne, story of Brad-dock in regard to, i. 190, 190 note.
- Bellaston, Lady, i. 6.
- Belleisle, Maréchal de, minister of war, 1758-1761, ii. 35, 176; double-dealing and boasting of Vaudreuil, ii. 171-173, 198; his letter to Montcalm, ii. 176, 177; plans of war enjoined upon Montcalm, ii. 177, 178; letter from Vaudreuil to, ii. 319.
- Belleisle, ii. 401, 405.
- Bellona, i. 480.
- Bengal, ii. 406.
- Bennington, i. 291.
- Benoit, ii. 28.
- Berkeley, Sir William, his opinion of education for the people, i. 29.
- Berks, i. 347.
- Berlin, ii. 388.
- Bernard, Governor of Massachusetts, ii. 376, 377.
- Bernès, ii. 99.
- Berniers, commissary-general, ii. 259, 260, 438; the state of Quebec described after the siege, ii. 328.
- Bernis, Abbé de, minister of foreign affairs, ii. 393.
- Berry, battalion of, ii. 87, 88, 99, 100, 104, 105.
- Berryer, minister of marine and colonies, 1758-1761, ii. 175; official cor-ruption in Canada, ii. 31-33; ministerial rebukes sent to officials in Canada, ii. 31-37; letters from Vaudreuil, ii. 141, 142, 173, 318, 319; boasting and jealousy of Vaudreuil, ii. 164, 171; prepossessed against Bougainville, ii. 173, 175; reproof given to Vaudreuil, ii. 375.
- Biddle, Edward, letter from Reading, i. 344.
- "Biche" number of her guns, ii. 54 note.
- "Bienfaisant," ii. 67; number of her guns, ii. 54 note; seized by the English, ii. 68, 69.
- Bienville, Céloron de. See Céloron.
- Bigot, François, Intendant of Canada, i. 65 note, 67, 67 note, 77 note, 80, 81, 242, ii. 9, 17; his official corruption, i. 80, 81, 87, 88, 242, 462, ii. 22-38; his plans against the English, i. 101; the Indians encouraged to butcher the English, i. 103; sails for Europe, i. 242; returns to Canada, i. 253; defends Vergor, i. 253, ii. 278; his character and office, i. 376, ii. 17, 18, 32, 33; his popularity, i. 466; relates the cruelties of the Indians, ii. 4, 5; his relations with Vaudreuil, ii. 18, 319, 323; his birth, ii. 18; his official journeys and pleasure-excursions, ii. 18-21; his manner of life, ii. 18-22, 28-30, 203; his houses and palace, ii. 21, 22; his gambling, and frauds in trade, ii. 21, 22-28; his circle of friends, ii. 22-30; the lover of Madame Péan, ii. 28; receives ministerial rebukes, ii. 31-37; promissory notes issued, ii. 32; revelations of his stealings, ii. 34-37, 37 note; breaks with Cadet, ii. 36; statistics concerning the rations at Fort Duquesne, ii. 152 note; the dissensions between Montcalm and Vaudreuil, ii. 167; the siege and reduction of Quebec, ii. 202, 234, 259, 326 note; Vaudreuil holds a council of war, ii. 218, 219, 305, 306; forces at Quebec, ii. 298 note, 437; French troops available after the battle, ii. 305 note; returns with the army to Quebec, ii. 313, 314; arrested, and thrown into the Bastille, ii. 385; his trial, ii. 385, 386; his sentence, ii. 386; his letters, ii. 438.
- "Billy" assists Surgeon Williams, i. 306; sickness in the army, ii. 120.
- "Bizarre," number of her guns, ii. 54 note.
- Black Hole of Calcutta, the, ii. 45.

- Black Hunter, the, i. 204.
 Black Mountain, i. 430.
 Black Point, ii. 53.
 Black Rifle, the, i. 204.
 Blanchard, Colonel, defends Fort Lyman, i. 294; a letter of warning sent to, i. 296.
 Blodget, Samuel, i. 301 note; his view of the battle at Lake George, i. 306; prospective plan, etc., of the battle near Lake George, etc., i. 316 note, 317 note.
 Blomendon, Cape, i. 268, 269.
 "Bloody morning scout," the, i. 303.
 Bloody Pond, origin of its name, i. 309.
 Blue Ridge, panic among the settlers, i. 331.
 Bœufs, Rivière aux, i. 128.
 Bois, Abbé, ii. 196 note, 309.
 Boishébert, a French officer, i. 265, 266, 420, 436; to induce the Acadians to leave their home, i. 99; troops sent to watch the English frontier, i. 116; letter to Manach quoted, i. 266; leads the attack at Peticodiac, i. 276; forces of, i. 276 note; approaches Louisbourg, ii. 66; tried for peculation, ii. 170; his dealings with the Acadians, ii. 170.
 Bolling, a Virginian gentleman, i. 226, 226 note.
 Bolton, i. 492 note.
 Bonaventure, i. 125.
 Bond, Dr., i. 228.
 Bonhomme, Michel, ii. 309.
 Bonnecamp, Father, a Jesuit priest, i. 52, 53; extract from his journal, i. 39, 45, 62 note; his map, i. 62 note; at Detroit, i. 76; his opinion of Céloron, i. 77.
 Bordeaux, i. 457, ii. 18, 23.
 Boscawen, Admiral, ordered to intercept the French fleet, i. 184-186; takes charge of the fleet sent against Louisbourg, ii. 49, 51, 56-74; at Halifax, ii. 56, 57; siege and capitulation of Louisbourg, ii. 57-75; the correspondence with Drucour, ii. 71, 72, 74, 81 note; unwilling to follow Amherst's wishes, ii. 79.
 Boston, i. 239, 245, 317 note, ii. 77, 79; relative size of, i. 31; rules laid down for the soldiers on the Sabbath Day, i. 246; departure of the English troops for Nova Scotia, i. 247; transport-vessels to be hired to convey the Acadians from Nova Scotia, i. 266, 276; treatment received by the Acadian exiles, i. 282; winter-quarters found for the troops, i. 439, 440; rejoicing at the fall of Louisbourg, ii. 78; taxes levied to pay the war-debt, ii. 85; news of the fall of Canada, ii. 377.
 "Boston Evening Post," article upon provincial soldiery, ii. 118, 119.
 Botwood, Edward, killed, ii. 233 note.
 "Hot Stuff," ii. 234 note.
 Bougainville, i. 376, 407, 454; aide-de-camp to Montcalm, i. 282, 361; his description of the Acadian exiles, i. 282, 283; his youth, i. 363; friendly relations with Montcalm, i. 363, 456, 465; terms of capitulation proposed to the English, at Oswego, i. 413; joins the war-party of Perière, i. 429-431; his description of the Indians and their cruelties, i. 430, 431, 465, 478, 479, 483, 484, 506, 507, ii. 4, 5, 10, 11, 145 note; perplexity at finding the boats of Rogers, i. 437; praised by Bourlamaque, i. 455; life during Lent, i. 458; the ships-of-war at Louisbourg, i. 473 note; seeks to gain Indian allies, i. 475, 476; sings the war-song, i. 476; the "St. Bartholomew of the oxen," i. 479; his diary quoted, i. 503, 513 note; sent as a messenger to Montreal from Fort William Henry, i. 508; evidence concerning the massacre at Fort William Henry, i. 514 note; official knavery commented upon, ii. 27; double-dealing of Vaudreuil, ii. 173; extract from, concerning Vaudreuil's plans, ii. 86, 87; slightly wounded, ii. 110; expedition of, to France, ii. 173-176; his efforts to gain aid for Canada, ii. 173-175; his promotion, ii. 174; to negotiate the marriages of the children of Montcalm, ii. 176; return to Canada, ii. 176, 177, 197, 198; sad news brought to Montcalm, ii. 179; his opinion of the strength of Quebec, ii. 209; sent from Beaufort to oppose the English, ii. 263; precautions taken to watch the shore of Quebec, ii. 275, 276; at Cap-Rouge, ii. 276; Holmes's vessels sail up the river, ii. 278, 279; deceived by a feint of Wolfe, ii. 279, 280; deceived by the movement of Holmes's vessels, ii. 283; supply-boats to be sent to Montcalm, ii. 283, 286; neglects to follow Holmes's vessels, ii. 285; danger of Wolfe's position, ii. 288, 289; attacks the light infantry, ii. 290; repulsed, ii. 290; statistics of the forces at Quebec, ii. 298 note; the fall of his friends, ii. 304; council

- of war held, ii. 305; his forces, ii. 305, 305 note; question of capitulation for Quebec, ii. 305-307; remains at Cap-Rouge, ii. 313, 314; follows the army to Quebec, ii. 314; the fall of Canada, ii. 360-382; at Isle-aux-Noix, ii. 361; ordered to stop Haviland's progress, ii. 367; at Montreal, ii. 372; articles of capitulation carried to Amherst, ii. 372-373; Montreal capitulates, ii. 372-374.
- Boundary, questions of, i. 37, 61, 79, 122, 123-128, 168, 184, 236-238, 259: the matter discussed at Paris, i. 86.
- Bouquet, Lieutenant-Colonel Henry, ii. 133; serves in reducing Fort Duquesne, ii. 133, 163; interview with Washington, ii. 133; his soldiers, ii. 133; the expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii. 133-163; justice of his opinion of Washington, ii. 134; relations with Forbes, ii. 134, 135; extracts from his correspondence with Forbes, ii. 136-138, 142, 154, 155; his tact with the Indians, ii. 139, 140; forward movement of, ii. 141; the road over the Alleghanies, ii. 141; Grant's expedition, ii. 151-155; retreat of Major Grant, ii. 154; sufferings of Forbes's troops, ii. 157; letter to Chief Justice Allen quoted, ii. 161, 161 note.
- Bourbon, house of, i. 9, 41, 42, 76, 453, ii. 397, 408; triumphs of, i. 10; the Family Compact, ii. 396.
- Bourbon, Island of, i. 10.
- Bourgogne, battalion of, i. 368, ii. 54; ordered to America, i. 182.
- Bourlamaque, Chevalier de, i. 373, ii. 96, 212, 308; named as the third officer of Montcalm, i. 360, ii. 87; embarks for America, i. 363, 364; extracts from his correspondence with Montcalm, i. 454, 455, 457-459, 466, ii. 7, 8, 167-169, 275, 427, 428, 438; encampment of, i. 477; preparations to attack Fort William Henry, i. 477; his efforts to save the English, i. 510; Montcalm's position near Ticonderoga, ii. 99; the battle of Ticonderoga, ii. 104; wounded, ii. 110; his promotion, ii. 174; ordered to hold Ticonderoga, ii. 195; troops ordered to Quebec, ii. 198; letter from Vaudreuil, ii. 233; Amherst attacks him, ii. 237, 238; retires before Amherst, ii. 238; at Isle-aux-Noix, ii. 238, 239, 249, 265; letter from Lévis quoted, ii. 252; retreat of, ii. 265; letter from Vaudreuil, ii. 275; his troops advance upon Montreal, ii. 364, 365; his troops thinning out, ii. 365, 366; joined by the French, ii. 368; movements of Amherst, ii. 369, 370; at Montreal, ii. 372; letter from Montcalm given in the original, ii. 427, 428.
- Braddock, Major-General, i. 181, 286, 318; ordered to America with regiments, i. 181-183; his arrival at Hampton, i. 187; opinion of, expressed by Dinwiddie, i. 187, 188; opinions of, held by different persons, i. 187-190; characteristics of, i. 187-191; anecdotes of, i. 188-190; story told of duel with Colonel Gumley, i. 189; beloved as Governor of Gibraltar, i. 189, 190; interview with Dury, i. 190; parting visit to George Anne Bellamy, i. 190; doubts concerning the office held at Gibraltar, i. 190 note; position held by, in the Co d'stream Guards, i. 191; arrival of the regiments at Hampton, i. 191; opinion of, held by Horace Walpole, i. 191; sends for the governors of the colonies to meet in council, i. 191-195; his instructions laid before the council at Albany, i. 193, 194; in sympathy with Shirley's plans, i. 193, 194; to lead the expedition against Fort Duquesne, i. 194; decisions of the Council at Albany, i. 194, 195; suggestions of, approved by the Council at Albany, i. 195; matters to be laid before the colonial Assemblies, i. 195; suggestions of, with regard to ship-building, i. 195; error in regard to his campaign, i. 196; lands in Virginia, i. 196; supplies scarce, i. 197-199; aided by Franklin, i. 198, 199; his expedition against Fort Duquesne, i. 198, 227-233, ii. 423-426; need of wagons, i. 199; his troops, i. 200, 214, 220 note; his estimate of the provincial troops, i. 200, 201; relations with Washington, i. 201; his horses and wagons, i. 199, 201; invites Washington to become his aide-de-camp, i. 203; tries to secure the aid of Indians, i. 203, 204; his reception of Captain Jack and his company, i. 204; departure of his expedition for the scene of action, i. 204, 205; his scorn of Indians, i. 204, 205; road made for his expedition, i. 204-206, ii. 133, 187, 161; difficulties of the march, i. 205, 206; consultation with Washington,

- i. 206; his forces reach Little Meadows, i. 206; illness among his men, i. 206; his mode of advance, i. 206, 207; fords the Monongahela, i. 207, 212; rumors of his approach reach Fort Duquesne, i. 210, 211; nature of the country through which he passed, i. 213-216; destructive fire of the French and Indians, i. 216, 217; confusion among the English troops, i. 216, 218; his ignorance of American warfare, i. 217; horrors of the battle, i. 217-219; number of his army lost in the battle of the Monongahela, i. 219, 220, 220 note; shot in the lungs, i. 220; his papers left to the Indians, i. 220; retreat of his troops, i. 220-227; his defeat, i. 220-227, 221 note, 293, 322, 323, 329, 340, 414, ii. 221, 423-426; plans drawn by Mackellar for his expedition, i. 221 note; condition of, i. 223; his sufferings, i. 224; reinforcements for, under Dunbar, i. 223, 224; confusion in his camp, i. 225; panic among the troops, i. 225; his death, i. 225, 226, 323, 328, ii. 134; remarks concerning the soldiery, i. 225, 226; buried in the road, i. 226; mentioned in Campbell's letter, i. 227; letter from Washington quoted, concerning, i. 230; Shirley made commander-in-chief, i. 233; the Council at Alexandria, i. 234, 286; letters of, warn Dieskau of danger, i. 288, 289; his dead soldiers left to the wolves, but afterwards buried, i. 312, ii. 159, 160; his captured papers reveal the plans of the English, i. 324; his instructions to Major-General Shirley, i. 326 note; his roads used by the invaders, i. 331; his battalions, i. 382; journal of his expedition, i. 196 note; compared with Forbes, ii. 134.
- Braddock, Fanny, stories of, i. 188, 189; her death, i. 188, 189.
- Bradstreet, Lieutenant-Colonel John, men placed under, by Shirley, i. 393; his boatmen carry provisions to Oswego, i. 393, 394; action with Villiers' forces, i. 394-396; his success, i. 395-397; his boatmen sent to Oswego, i. 405; serves under Abercromby, ii. 93; reconnoitres the landing, ii. 94; his action after the death of Lord Howe, ii. 98; his armed boatmen, ii. 105; troops given him to conquer Fort Frontenac, ii. 127, 128; conquest of Fort Frontenac, ii. 127-129; mercy shown to his prisoners, ii. 128, 129; advances towards Albany, ii. 129; his return to Oswego, ii. 129; Fort Frontenac dismantled, ii. 129; importance of his conquest, ii. 129; supplies destroyed by, ii. 155; reported to advance upon Lake Ontario, ii. 197.
- Brandenburg, House of, promoted to royalty, i. 17.
- Brest, i. 182, 184, 288, 362; embarkation of Dieskau's expedition, i. 182, 183; French armament at, i. 183.
- Bréard, his official knavery, ii. 23, 24; accused of fraud in Canada, ii. 385.
- "Britannia," ship, ii. 33; captured by privateers, ii. 33.
- British colonies. See English colonies.
- British ministry, the, i. 199, 285, ii. 40, 397; the plan for building a naval station at Chebucto, i. 92, 93; attitude of, toward the Indians, i. 171; the French forts to be attacked, i. 240, 241; hostility to Shirley in New York, i. 328; the removal of Shirley from his command, i. 383, 384; ill effect of a letter from Wolfe, ii. 323; changes in, ii. 393; Newcastle resigns his position, ii. 400; plans of Pitt laid before, ii. 397.
- British Museum, the, i. 126 note, 202.
- British Provinces, the, i. 283.
- Britons, ii. 208.
- Broadway, ii. 76.
- Brogie, i. 10.
- Brown, Lieutenant, the attack on Louisbourg, ii. 59-61; aids Wolfe when shot, ii. 296.
- Brunswick, ii. 47.
- Brunswick, Ferdinand of, ii. 399, 400.
- Buchanan, letter to, from John Campbell, i. 227.
- Buchannon. See Buchanan.
- Buffaloes, i. 56.
- Buisson, the, ii. 370.
- Bull, Fort, i. 374; attacked and reduced by Léry, i. 374, 375.
- Bullitt, Captain, expedition of Major Grant, ii. 152, 154.
- Burd, Colonel, his mode of warfare, ii. 135; interview with Forbes, ii. 138; Indian allies join the army, ii. 139, 140.
- Burgesses slow to enforce obedience among the Virginian troops, i. 331.
- Burgheers, the, of France, i. 14.
- Burgoyne, John, ii. 102; his expedition, ii. 402; mention made of Langlade, in connection with Braddock's defeat, ii. 426.
- Burke, Captain, cruelly treated by - Indians, i. 511; his remarks concerning Wolfe quoted, ii. 267, 268.

- Burnaby, "Travels in North America" cited, i. 163 note.
- Burned Camp, i. 490, ii. 94; origin of name, i. 489.
- Burney, Thomas, escapes from Indians, i. 85.
- Burton, Lieutenant-Colonel, his encounter with the French in Brad-dock's expedition, i. 218; his report concerning the provincial camp, i. 401, 402; orders given to bring his men to the Point of Orleans, ii. 281; his men embark for the heights, ii. 288; dying command of Wolfe, ii. 297.
- Bury, Viscount, his charges against Massachusetts refuted, ii. 84, 85; his "Exodus of the Western Nations" cited, ii. 84 note.
- Bussy, M. de, comes to London as envoy, ii. 395.
- Bute, Earl of, ii. 393, 397; made secretary of state, ii. 393; propositions made by Choiseul to Pitt, ii. 395; comes into power, ii. 398; anecdote of the dislike of the people for, ii. 398; succeeds Newcastle as First Lord of the Treasury, ii. 400; desires peace with France, ii. 402, 403; peace made between France and England, ii. 405.
- Buttes-à-Neveu, ii. 290, 345, 354.
- Byng, Admiral, i. 36, ii. 46.

C.

- Cabinet, the. See British Ministry.
- Cadet, Joseph, ii. 175; official knavery, ii. 22-28, 30, 319, 358, 385; ministerial rebukes administered to, ii. 31-33; oppresses the Canadians, ii. 169, 170; supply-boats sent to Quebec, ii. 198; relations with Vaudreuil, ii. 199, 319, 323; his manner of living, ii. 203; thrown into the Bastille, ii. 385; his trial, ii. 385, 386.
- Cæsar, dog owned by Wolfe, ii. 189.
- Cahokia, French settlement at, i. 41.
- Caldwell, site of, i. 498.
- Calvin, John, i. 27; his doctrines preached to the army, i. 295, 296, ii. 120, 121.
- Cambis, battalion of, ii. 54.
- Campbell, Lieutenant Alexander, ii. 435.
- Campbell, Major Colin, sent for news by Dinwiddie, i. 229.
- Campbell, Donald, ii. 493.

- Campbell, Duncan, ii. 93; his premonitions of death, ii. 93, 435; his death and burial, ii. 109, 433, 435, 436; the legend of Inverawe, ii. 433-436; vision of the child, ii. 435, 436.
- Campbell, James, ii. 433; vision seen by the child, ii. 435, 436.
- Campbell, John, letter from, to Buchanan, quoted, i. 227.
- Campbell, Captain John, his death, ii. 109.
- Canada, i. 24, 38, 39, 67 note, 76, 91, 111, 239, 319, 326, 376, ii. 23, 389; conquest of, by England, i. 2, 3; plans and political intentions of England with regard to, i. 1-3; censuses of, i. 20, 94 note; French possessions in, i. 20; difference in the political and religious systems, from those of the English colonies, i. 20, 21; Catholicism in, i. 21, ii. 412; aspects of, under the Church and King, i. 22-24; lack of popular legislation in, i. 35; the governors largely naval officers, i. 36; line of military posts connecting with Louisiana, i. 36-40, 80; methods of warfare and organization, i. 62, 143, 144; mission of Piquet, i. 67; method of building up a town, i. 77; La Jonquière succeeds La Galissonnière as governor of, i. 77, 78; Baron de Longueuil succeeds La Jonquière as governor of, i. 82; importance of Fort Chartres, i. 84; internal disorders of, i. 86, 87; official knavery and stealing, i. 87, 88, ii. 22-38, 171, 319, 321, 322, 358, 385, 386; confines of, i. 125; enmity towards New England, i. 169, 170, 176; Governor de Vaudreuil despatched to, i. 182; French expedition sails for, under Dieskau, i. 182, 183; plans of Shirley in regard to, i. 192, 193; plans of the English to repel the French in, i. 234; importance of the possession of Acadia, i. 237; return of Bigot, i. 253; conditions leading to the removal of the Acadians, i. 253-266 (see Acadia and Acadians); the governor of, depends on the priests for aid, i. 260; the Great Company, i. 283; the English victorious, i. 307-309; importance of the position of Niagara, i. 318, ii. 249; the fur-trade, i. 320; growth of political parties in, i. 367, 368; 466; the French troops and the militia, i. 368, 368 note, 370, 371, 372, 467, 468, ii. 178, 360; descriptions given by Montcalm, i. 372, 373; descriptions given by Duchat, i. 379, 380; causes of the English losses, i. 417-420; life at Montreal, i. 453; its government, ii. 17, 18; social and official life, ii. 18-22, 28-30; financial condition, ii. 31-33; efforts of Massachusetts to subdue, ii. 84, 85, 115; mission settlements of the Jesuits, ii. 144, 145; appeal made to court for assistance and troops, ii. 173-177; fall of Quebec, 195-234, 259-326 (see Quebec); effect of losing Fort Niagara, ii. 249; the result of Amherst's campaign, ii. 252, 253; Montcalm's position, ii. 262; authorities concerning the history of, ii. 325 note, 326 note; English rule, ii. 332; its winter, ii. 333; passes to the British crown, ii. 360-382, 395; Montreal capitulates, ii. 372-374; return of the troops to France, ii. 374, 383, 384; utterances from the pulpits after the fall of, ii. 377-379; her natural defences, ii. 380; end of the war, ii. 378-382; aided by Indians, ii. 381, 382; question of restoration to France, ii. 403, 407; predictions of Choiseul, ii. 403, 404; retention of, by England, approved by Pitt, ii. 407; the peace signed at Paris, ii. 407.

Canadians, the, i. 22, 23, 68, 79; their missions and religion, i. 22, 23, 64, 67, 72; sent to watch the English frontier, i. 116; join the expedition of Duquesne to the Ohio, i. 128-135, 143-161; at Fort Duquesne, i. 208; number of, fighting under the French flag, i. 211; their cowardly action, i. 215; losses of, at the battle of the Monongahela, i. 223, 223 note; a litigious race, i. 259; rapacity of, i. 283; harsh treatment of the Acadians, i. 283; under Dieskau, i. 296, 299, 303, 304, 307; the battle of Lake George, i. 299, 304-317; attacked by a party from Fort Lyman, i. 308, 309; troops at Fort Frontenac, i. 324; political parties among, i. 367, 368; join the expedition of Léry, i. 374, 375; guard Fort Frontenac, i. 376; mode of fighting, i. 377; at Ticonderoga, i. 378, 442; harass the English, i. 388, 393; evils of long encampments, i. 402; under Rigaud i. 408; capture of Oswego, i. 409-420; under Montcalm, i. 421; join the war-party of Perière, i. 429-431; disguised as Indians, i. 429, ii. 221; fight with Rogers' rangers, i.

445; the attack upon Fort William Henry, i. 447, 448, 476, 477, 490-513, 514 note; exaggerated praise given by Vaudreuil, i. 460-462; their sentiment towards Montcalm, i. 463, 464; fortified camps of, i. 477; dash at Fort Edward, i. 485; orders of Vaudreuil in relation to the return of, ii. 3, 4; the fight at German Flats, ii. 6, 7; join Hebecourt ii. 12; official knavery, ii. 22-38; outrages practised upon the Acadians, ii. 26; loss of Louisbourg, ii. 52-81; under Montcalm at Ticonderoga, ii. 104; under Lévis, ii. 109; meet the war-party of Rogers, ii. 124; encounter with Major Grant, ii. 152-154; sent to Montcalm, ii. 165, 166; comments of Montcalm concerning, ii. 168, 169; their sufferings, ii. 169, 170; their loyalty and courage, ii. 169, 170; their alarm and discontent, ii. 171, 172; siege and fall of Quebec, ii. 195-234, 259-326; first proclamation issued by Wolfe, ii. 213, 214; desert the French, ii. 219, 222, 223, 264, 265, 365, 366; fight like Indians, ii. 221; coureurs-de-bois, ii. 221; their dread of the Indians, ii. 222, 223; Wolfe's second proclamation, ii. 225, 226; the siege of Niagara, ii. 243-249; the third proclamation of Wolfe to, ii. 261; dread of losing their supplies, ii. 264; defend Cap-Rouge, ii. 279; last movement of Wolfe, ii. 280-297; rally at Côte Ste.-Geneviève, ii. 300, 301; panic stricken, ii. 302; the army to return to Quebec, ii. 310-314; bring news to Quebec of promised help, ii. 315, 316; the capitulation of Quebec, ii. 316; the ladies, ii. 329; befriended by Murray, ii. 331; kindness to some wounded officers, ii. 332; threatened the English, ii. 335, 336; encounter with Major Dalling, ii. 336; fresh efforts to attack Quebec, ii. 338, 340, 341-358; the winter, ii. 339, 340; at Sainte-Foy, ii. 342, 442-444; the fall of Canada, ii. 360-382; Murray advances upon Montreal, ii. 363-366; proclamation of Vaudreuil, ii. 366; their privileges as set down in the capitulation of Canada, ii. 374; kindly treated by the English, ii. 374, 375; skilful leadership of, ii. 381. Canard River, i. 268; reconnoissance of, i. 272; the inhabitants summoned by Winslow to hear the King's orders, i. 271, 272.

- Candiac, château of, i. 356, 453; family seat of Montcalm, i. 356, 359, ii. 317; departure of Montcalm from, i. 360.
- Canidia, i. 438.
- Cannibalism among the Indians, i. 85, 478, 480, 483, 484, ii. 339.
- Canseau, garrison at, i. 92; destroyed by the French, i. 93.
- Canseau, Straits of, i. 109.
- Cap-Rouge, ii. 209, 224, 271, 276, 278, 288, 332, 342, 357; held by Dumas, ii. 228; defended by the French, ii. 279, 280, 282, 283; the fall of Quebec, ii. 304; expedition of Lévis, ii. 343, 344.
- Cap-Santé, ii. 19.
- Cape Breton, i. 28, 91, 95 note, 98, 105, 108, 178, ii. 384, 385; restoration of, by England to France, i. 2, 3; the Acadians transported to, i. 235, 235 note; importance of the possession of Acadia to the French, i. 237; papers and writings relating to, i. 243 note; plans of the English with regard to the Acadians, i. 264, 265 (see Acadia and Acadians); description of, ii. 52-54; arrival of Boscawen's expedition, ii. 56; the capitulation of Louisbourg, ii. 74, 75; given up to England, ii. 405.
- "Capricieux," the, ii. 81 note; number of her guns, ii. 54 note; burned at anchor, ii. 67.
- Card-playing, i. 270.
- Carillon (see Ticonderoga), ii. 435.
- Carleton, Sir Guy, ii. 190, 440; lands at Pointe-aux-Trembles, ii. 224; drives the Indians from Pointe-aux-Trembles, ii. 225.
- Carlisle, Penn., i. 227, ii. 135; village of, ii. 136; departure of Forbes, ii. 136.
- Carlos III., secret negotiations of Choiseul with, ii. 396; succeeds to the throne of Spain, ii. 396; the Family Compact, ii. 396.
- Carter, Colonel Charles, letter to, cited, i. 229.
- Carter, Landon, quoted, concerning the service of the country, i. 331.
- Carteret, Earl Granville. See Granville.
- Carthage, i. 192, 419, ii. 377.
- Carthage, attack on, i. 245.
- Cartier, Jacques, ii. 339.
- Carver, Jonathan, his version of the massacre at Fort William Henry, i. 511; his narrow escape, i. 511, 512; his "Travels," i. 514 note.
- Cascades, the, ii. 370.
- Casgrain, Abbé, cited, i. 330 note, ii. 341 note.
- Castor, Isle au, ii. 20.
- Caswell, Jonathan, his letter concerning the expedition sent against Crown Point, i. 292.
- Catawbas, their service sought by the English army, ii. 139, 140.
- Catherine II. reigns in Russia, ii. 399; conciliated by Frederic, ii. 399.
- Catholicism, i. 64, 359, ii. 412; the tithes of, i. 13; policy of rule held by, i. 21, 22; in Maryland, i. 33; freedom of, accorded to the Acadians, i. 91, 112; evil influence of the priests upon the Acadians, i. 91, 94, 98, 102, 103, 106, 107, 243, 244, 257, 260-266, 283; in the English colonies, i. 193; in Pennsylvania, i. 339; in Europe, i. 355; influence over the Indians, i. 479, 480.
- Caughnawaga, i. 485; Indian mission at, i. 64, ii. 144.
- Caughnawagas, the, i. 23, 209, 476, ii. 123, 126.
- Cavaliers, the, i. 29.
- Cayugas, i. 391; efforts of the French to convert, i. 65.
- "Célèbre," the, number of her guns, ii. 54 note; burned by the English, ii. 66.
- Céloron de Bienville, i. 37, 77 note, 84 note, 128, 133; despatched to the West to hold the land for France, i. 37-62; at Ogdensburg and Niagara, i. 38; leaden plates buried by i. 43, 48, 50, 62 note; inscription on the plates, i. 43, 48, 62 note; the plates discovered, i. 48, 62 note; visits the Senecas, i. 44, 45; drives out the English from the West, i. 44-46; extract from his writings, i. 45 note, 50-53, 62 note; encounter with Indians at Scioto, i. 48, 49; name given by, to the Kenawha River, i. 48 note; failure of his plans with regard to La Demoiselle, i. 51, 52; return of his party to Canada, i. 52, 53; journey to the Ohio, i. 65; visits the mission of Father Piquet, i. 65; at Detroit i. 76, 77; his character, i. 77; ordered to attack Pickawillany, i. 81; orders from La Jonquière, i. 84.
- Celts in Pennsylvania, i. 31.
- Census, the, taken in Acadia and Canada, i. 20, 20 note, 94 note, 124, ii. 178.
- "Centurion," the, ii. 229, 231-233.
- Cerberus, dog belonging to Piquet, i. 69.
- Chambly, Fort, i. 453; abandoned by the French, ii. 368.
- Chambord, i. 10.

- Champlain, Lake, i. 2, 23, 192, 289, 294, 298, 321, 378, 398, 399, 407, 418, 428, 435, 442, 448, 453, 476, 477, ii. 88, 99, 121, 178, 196, 238, 249, 250, 252, 361, 362.
- Chandler, a chaplain, his diary quoted concerning the camp at Lake George, i. 314, 315.
- Chaplains, ii. 116, 117; their pay, i. 386; their accommodations, i. 405 note.
- Charles VI., his will, i. 18; death of, i. 18; his will set aside, i. 18, 19.
- Charles River, ii. 297.
- Charlesbourg, ii. 21, 22, 265, 307.
- Charlestown, ii. 256, 257; road built by Amherst, ii. 241.
- Charlevoix, i. 360.
- Charters, i. 25.
- Chartres, Fort, i. 40, 41, 76; increasing power of the English, i. 83.
- Château battery, the, ii. 208.
- Châtelet, the, ii. 385.
- Chaudière River, the, i. 169, 381; fortifications on, i. 192.
- Chautauqua Lake, i. 39.
- Chebucto, plan for making a naval station by the English, i. 92; harbor of, i. 92. See Halifax.
- Chénitou (Chignecto), i. 117 note.
- Cherbourg, ii. 47.
- Cherokees, the, i. 68, 139, 466, ii. 417; their service sought by the English army, ii. 139, 140.
- Chester County, i. 347.
- Chesterfield, Lord, i. 8; his opinion of Lord Albemarle, i. 180; acts as mediator, ii. 41; his despondency, ii. 45.
- "Chèvre," the number of her guns, ii. 54 note.
- Chew, Ensign, ii. 140 note.
- Chickasaws, the, i. 139.
- Chignecto, i. 117 note; preparations of the French to attack, i. 239; proposal to give the land to English settlers, i. 257.
- Chignecto Bay, i. 94, 120.
- Chignecto Channel, i. 267.
- Chiningué, i. 46, 53, 133.
- Chinodahichetha, name given by Céloron to the Kenawha River, i. 48 note.
- Chipody, i. 120, 121, 247, 254; news of disaster, i. 275.
- Choctaws, the, i. 68, 466.
- Choiseul, Duc de, ii. 393; made minister of foreign affairs, ii. 393; sketch of, by Stanley, ii. 393, 394; his character, ii. 394; propositions made to Pitt, ii. 394, 395; terms of peace offered to England, ii. 395; his forethought, ii. 396; the Family Compact, ii. 396; his negotiation with Pitt proves fruitless, ii. 396; desires peace with England, ii. 402, 403; his predictions concerning American possessions, ii. 403, 404.
- Christ Church, Philadelphia, ii. 162.
- Christianity, Indian followers of, i. 41, 42, 485, 487.
- Christmas Day, ii. 335.
- Church of Notre Dame de Quebec, ii. 442.
- Church of Rome. See Catholicism.
- Church of the Jesuits, the, after the siege, ii. 328.
- Clare River, i. 283.
- Claverie, La Friponne, ii. 24.
- Cleaveland, Miss Abby E., ii. 117 note.
- Cleaveland, John, chaplain of Bagley's Massachusetts regiment, ii. 76, 115; extract from his diary, ii. 115, 117 note, 127; report concerning the defences of Abercromby, ii. 115, 116; extract from letters to his wife, ii. 116, 117 note; preaching on Sunday, ii. 117; his illness, ii. 120.
- Clergy, the, how considered during the reign of George II., i. 7; the condition of, in France, i. 12, 13, 14, 15; corruption of, i. 12; influence of, in regard to the oath of allegiance for the Acadians, i. 106 note. See Acadians.
- Clergy battery, the, ii. 208.
- Clerk, engineer under Abercromby, ii. 103; reconnoitres the French works, ii. 103.
- Clermont, i. 10; recalled, ii. 47.
- Clinker, Humphrey, i. 178.
- Clinton, George, Governor of New York, i. 88 note; desirability of an Indian alliance, i. 59; invites commissioners from the provinces to meet the Indians at Albany, i. 61; quotation from, concerning the neglect of New York to protect Indian trade, i. 61, 62; Johnson's complaints of the French dealings with the Indians, i. 64; quarrels with the Assembly of New York, i. 73; complaints concerning invasions of territory by the French, i. 79.
- Clive, the victory of Plassey, ii. 45.
- Cobequid, i. 106; formerly the name of Truro, i. 94; Acadian emigration from, i. 109; mountains of, i. 269; failure of the expedition to, i. 280, 281.
- Cocquard, Father Claude Godefroy, i. 413; his remarks concerning the fall of Oswego, i. 413.

- Cod, Cape, i. 246; soldiers from, for the French campaigns, i. 246.
- Coffen, Stephen, deposition of, i. 131 note.
- Colbert, ii. 410.
- Colden, Alexander, ii. 432.
- Coldfoot, a Miami chief, i. 82.
- Coldstream Guards, the, i. 191.
- College of the Jesuits, the, after the siege, ii. 328.
- "Comète," number of her guns, ii. 54 note.
- Commissioners of boundary, i. 122, 123-128, 236-238; commissioners of Indian affairs, i. 172-176, 195.
- Condé, i. 10, ii. 184.
- Confians, Admiral, ii. 401.
- Congregationalists in the army, ii. 117.
- Congress at Albany, of Indians and English, i. 172-176.
- Connecticut, i. 61, 246, 286, 291, 304, 402; appointment of the governor of, i. 25; extent of the New England border, i. 28; soldiers in the expedition against Crown Point, i. 290, 291; recruits sent to Johnson, i. 313, 314; to provide an officer for the English garrison, i. 315; money granted to, from Parliament, i. 382 note; her sacrifices in time of war, ii. 86; provincials under Abercromby, ii. 93; men serving under Putnam, ii. 122.
- Connecticut River, the, ii. 254, 256.
- Conner, James, English scout, i. 415; visits Oswego, i. 415; the news of the loss carried to Fort Johnson, i. 416.
- Contades, i. 10; appointed to command, ii. 47.
- Contrecoeur, i. 429; succeeds Saint-Pierre in command, i. 143, 144; commandant at Fort Duquesne, i. 147, 208, ii. 423; Jumonville sent on an expedition to warn the English to leave the West, i. 148; harangues the Indians, i. 154; consults with Beaujeu, i. 210, 211; his resolution to despatch forces to meet Braddock, i. 210, 211; waits at Fort Duquesne, i. 211, 212; return of the troops after defeating Braddock, i. 221, 222; Dumas succeeds at Fort Duquesne, i. 329, 330; orders concerning prisoners, i. 330 note; receives the cross of the Order of St. Louis, ii. 426.
- Conway, General, letter from Walpole, ii. 358.
- Cook, his voyages, ii. 411.
- Cork, i. 182.
- Cope, Major Jean-Baptiste, Indian chief, i. 104; signs a treaty of peace with the English, i. 104, 105; the murder of Capt. Howe, i. 118, 119.
- Corbière, Colonel Parker's company taken, i. 484.
- Corlaer, Indian word for the English, i. 487.
- Corneille, ii. 9.
- Cornier, Madame, i. 455.
- Cornwallis, Lord, i. 93.
- Cornwallis, Edward, uncle of Lord Cornwallis, i. 93; made governor of Acadia, i. 93; opinions of Wolfe and of Horace Walpole concerning, i. 93, 110; makes the oath of allegiance more strict for the Acadians, i. 97-99; his successor, i. 104; efforts of, to compel the Acadians to swear fidelity to England, i. 105; discovers the treachery of the French, i. 107; misplaced confidence in the French crown, i. 111; angry letter written to the Bishop of Quebec, i. 107; relations with the French and Acadians, i. 107, 108, 110, 111; his speech to the Acadians, i. 110-112; mild rule of, in Nova Scotia, i. 113, 257; his opinion of Le Loutre, i. 114.
- Corpron, ii. 30; his official knavery, ii. 22-24; thrown into the Bastille, ii. 385.
- Cortland, manor of, i. 32.
- Cosnan, Captain, ii. 221.
- Côte d'Abraham, ii. 342.
- Côte Ste.-Geneviève, ii. 300, 301, 342.
- Côteau du Lac, the, ii. 370.
- Coudres, Isle aux, ii. 198, 260; ordered to be evacuated, ii. 199; Admiral Durell at, ii. 203.
- Coureurs-de-bois, ii. 178, 221.
- Courserac, ii. 81 note; sent to the English camp from Louisbourg, ii. 73, 74.
- Courtemanche, his advance upon Fort William Henry, i. 491.
- Courts-martial in the English army, ii. 236.
- Courval, the French fire-rafts commanded by, ii. 227.
- Crawford, Chaplain William, letter to Timothy Paine, i. 404; his account of the provincial camp, i. 404, 405.
- Croghan, George, i. 42, 203; Indian trader, i. 54; expedition of, to the Ohio, i. 54-59; sent to the Miamis to promote friendly feelings, i. 59, 60, 60 note; reward offered for his scalp, i. 79; accusations against, i. 80; brings Indians to Braddock's camp, i. 203.
- Crown Point, i. 24, 174, 289, 327, 378,

- 453, ii. 87, 102; capture of, planned, i. 192-194, 285; expedition against, led by Colonel William Johnson, i. 194, 196, 285-317, 374, 382; French designs in relation to, i. 289, 293, 295; reached by Dieskau, i. 296; the battle, i. 303-316; result of the expedition, i. 313, 314; importance of, i. 378: plan of capture by Shirley, i. 381, 382, 384, 398; expeditions of Rogers' rangers, i. 433-437; Winslow's regret at the failures of the English, i. 439; the scouting-party of Rogers, i. 441-445; captured by Amherst, ii. 235-240, 265; retreat of the French, ii. 238, 239; new fort built by Amherst, ii. 240, 241, 252; the situation between French and English, ii. 361
- Cruger, Mayor, difficulty in quartering the troops in New York, i. 440.
- Cruikshank, Captain, affront given to a provincial regiment, ii. 119.
- Culloden, battle of, i. 6, 8, 19, ii. 185.
- Cumberland, Duke of, i. 194, 253, ii. 40, 41; his place as a soldier, i. 179; his opinion of Major-General Braddock, i. 181, 182; military plans of, i. 234; his prejudice against Shirley, i. 421; miscarriage of his plans, ii. 45; recalled from Germany, ii. 47.
- Cumberland, Nova Scotia, i. 268.
- Cumberland, Penn., i. 423.
- Cumberland County laid waste, i. 344.
- Cumberland Fort, i. 203, 225-229, ii. 133; erection of, i. 200; distance from Little Meadows, i. 206; Colonel James Innes, commander of, i. 226; Indians attack the frontier, and murder the settlers, i. 329-331, 342; name given to Beauséjour, i. 253, 255 (see Beauséjour), 267, 281, ii. 181; St. Patrick's Day celebrated, ii. 182.
- Cumming, C. F. Gordon, ii. 436.
- Cummings, Colonel, disgraceful order of Abercromby to, ii. 114.
- D.
- Daine, Mayor of Quebec, ii. 311.
- Dalling, Major, sent to occupy Port Espagnol, ii. 78; Canadians taken prisoners, ii. 225, 226; encounter with Canadians and Indians, ii. 336; his light infantry, ii. 347.
- Dalquier, Lieutenant-Colonel, ii. 303; his leadership and bravery, ii. 348.
- Dalzell, Captain, skirmish in the woods, ii. 122; his death, ii. 122.
- Daniel, ii. 149.
- Danvers, ii. 116.
- Darby, Major, ii. 368.
- Daudin, priest of Pisiquid, i. 244.
- Daun, the Austrian general, ii. 387; his victory, ii. 387.
- "Dauphin," escape of the, i. 185, 186.
- Dauphin's Bastion, the, ii. 55; approach of Wolfe, ii. 66; condition of the besieged, ii. 69; the white flag, ii. 71; to be opened to British troops, ii. 74, 75.
- Dauphin's Battery, the, ii. 208.
- Davison, a trader, i. 133.
- De Cosne, i. 184.
- Defiance, Mount, ii. 102-104.
- Déjean, i. 361.
- Delancey, Lieutenant-Governor of New York, i. 316, 328, 440; asked to aid in repelling the French on the Ohio, i. 141; council of governors held with Braddock, i. 191-195; questions at issue in New York, i. 350; the cabal against Shirley, i. 328, 383; orders to fire upon deserters, ii. 3.
- Delancey, Oliver, soldiers sent to lodge with, i. 440.
- Delaware, George, Indian chief, 145.
- Delaware, colony of, i. 33.
- Delaware River, the, i. 40, 45.
- Delawares, the, i. 46, 57, 60, 130; attitude towards the English, i. 59; efforts of the English to obtain allies from, i. 150; instigated to fight against the English, i. 203, 329, 343, 344; at Fort Duquesne, i. 154; council held with Johnson, i. 391, 392; attack and reduction of Kittanning, i. 423-427; convention of Indians, ii. 142, 143; wavering allies, ii. 143; declare themselves allies of the English, ii. 147, 148, 150.
- Delouche commands the fire-ships, ii. 210, 211.
- De Monts, commission of, i. 123 note.
- Denmark, i. 10.
- Denny, Governor, i. 426 note.
- De Noyan, commandant at Fort Frontenac, ii. 128.
- Desandrouin, French engineer, ii. 100-102.
- Desauniers, Demoiselles, i. 64.
- Deschambault, ii. 8, 263, 341, 361.
- Deschamps, Chief Justice, diary found in his house, ii. 82 note.
- Deschenaux, official corruption, ii. 30.
- Descombes, French engineer, i. 408; reconnoitres the fort at Oswego, i. 409; shot by an Indian, i. 409.
- Desgouttes withdraws the "Arétuse," ii. 65; considerations in regard to

- capitulation, ii. 71-73; correspondence with Druccour, ii. 81 note.
- Des Habitants River, the, i. 268; reconnaissance of, 272.
- Desherbiers, commandant at Louisbourg, i. 101; instructions in regard to the Acadians, i. 101, 102; his treachery, i. 102, 103; medals sent to, i. 102.
- Désirade Island, restored by England, ii. 405.
- Desmeloizes, Mademoiselle, wife of M. Péan, ii. 28.
- Des Moines, i. 486.
- De Soto, i. 24.
- Detroit, i. 82, 209, 219, 485, ii. 122, 142, 244; importance of the post, i. 75, 76, 80; population of, i. 76, 77 note; Céloron visits, with a royal commission, i. 76, 77; plan of, i. 76 note; efforts to build up, by the French, i. 77; small-pox at, i. 83; the English to be attacked, i. 84; danger to Fort Duquesne, ii. 160; the coureurs-de-bois, ii. 178; retreat to, of the French forces, ii. 247; injured by the loss of Niagara, ii. 248, 249.
- Dettingen, i. 19, ii. 185, 391.
- Devonshire, Duke of, ii. 41.
- Diamond, Cape, ii. 208, 209, 212, 355.
- "Diana," the, ii. 356.
- Diderot, i. 16, 288, 309 note; meeting with Dieskau, i. 308 note, 309 note, 311.
- Dieskau, Baron, i. 285, 373, 376; made general in Canada, i. 182; letter of, quoted, i. 182, 183; his forces, i. 288, 296, 368; a letter of Braddock found, i. 288, 289; plans of, in regard to the French campaign, i. 288, 289; prepares an ambush for Johnson, i. 296, 300, 302, 303; advances through the forest, i. 297-299; news of the approach of the English, i. 300; success of the action against Whiting and Williams, i. 303; the battle of Lake George, i. 304-317; badly wounded, i. 307, 308, 311; carried to the English camp, and kindly cared for, i. 308, 309; his defeat, i. 308, 498, ii. 88; his remarks concerning his surrender, and Johnson's soldiers, i. 308, 308 note, 310, 311; his interview with Diderot, i. 308 note, 309 note, 311; his life threatened by the Mohawks, i. 309, 310; his life saved by Johnson, i. 309; carried to Fort Lyman, i. 310; his service under Saxe, i. 310; his death, i. 311; his Indians tomahawk the Englishmen, i. 312; succeeded by Montcalm, i. 356; his salary, i. 361.
- Diet at Presburg, i. 19.
- Dinwiddie, Robert, Lieutenant-Governor of Virginia, i. 42, 136, 137; letter to Hamilton quoted, i. 42 note; desirability of an Indian alliance, i. 59; difficulties of boundary, i. 61; letter from, to Saint-Pierre, introducing George Washington, i. 132, 134, 135; tries to repel the French aggression in the West, i. 132, 137, 139, 142, 176, 193; answer sent to, from Saint-Pierre, i. 135; report of Washington made to, i. 136; orders received from the King, i. 137, 138; his dependence on the Assembly of Virginia, i. 137, 138, 163; Virginia refuses to pay certain fees, i. 138; sends Washington with a party to resist the French at Fort Duquesne, i. 138-161; orders sent to Indian tribes on the Ohio, i. 139; seeks aid from other colonies, i. 139; letter to Lord Fairfax, i. 139; a fort to be built on the Ohio, i. 139; letters to Hanbury quoted, i. 140, 141, 144, 144 note; invites the Indians to meet him at Winchester, i. 141; the governor's palace, i. 142, 163; seeks to raise regiments, i. 142, 143; plans of the English blighted, i. 143, 144; good news from Washington, i. 145; letters from Druillon, i. 149; the defeat of Washington, i. 162; letter to a London correspondent quoted, i. 163; speech to the Assembly of Virginia, i. 164, 165; exasperated at the French, i. 170, 171; letter to Lord Granville quoted, i. 176; correspondence with Glen, i. 176, 177; desires aid from the home government, i. 177; taxes recommended, i. 177; his opinion of Braddock, i. 187, 188; accompanies Braddock to Alexandria, i. 191; council of governors held with Braddock, i. 191-195; defends taxation by Parliament, i. 193; praises of the New England colonies, i. 197; supplies for the army scarce, i. 197, 198; greatly disturbed at the losses of the English, i. 228-235; correspondence with Orme quoted, i. 229-233; correspondence with Washington, i. 229, 231; letter to Lord Halifax, i. 229; sends Major Colin Campbell for news, i. 229, 231; letter to Dunbar quoted, i. 231, 232; desires to renew offensive operations, i. 232, 233; his fears realized, i. 233; his view of Dunbar's conduct justifi-

- fied, i. 233 note; his plans of war, i. 332; relations with Washington, ii. 131, 132; removed from office, ii. 132; matters pertaining to the "assassination" of Jumonville, ii. 421-423.
- Dobbs, Governor of North Carolina, i. 187; council of governors held with Braddock, i. 194-195.
- Dobson, Captain, i. 229.
- Dog tribe, the, i. 68.
- Dominica taken by England, ii. 400; to belong to England, ii. 405.
- Doreil, commissary of war, embarks with Dieskau, i. 182; letter from Montcalm to, ii. 111, 112; letter to the minister of war, ii. 162, 163; letter concerning the state of Canada, ii. 171, 172; double-dealing of Vaudreuil, ii. 173; appeal made to France, ii. 173-175; matters pertaining to Ticonderoga, ii. 431-436.
- Douville, orders concerning prisoners, i. 330 note; killed, i. 423.
- Dover, ii. 403.
- Dresden taken from Frederic, ii. 388.
- Drowned Lands, the, i. 298, 302.
- Drucour, Governor at Louisbourg, ii. 56; the siege and reduction of Louisbourg, ii. 56-81, 81 note; statistics of troops, ii. 59 note; his effort to protect the harbor of Louisbourg, ii. 64; courtesies between the commanders, ii. 64, 65; his lodgings in flames, ii. 67; Amherst promises to spare the sick, ii. 70 note; terms of capitulation extended to, ii. 71-74; signs the capitulation, ii. 75.
- Drucour, Madame, her heroism, ii. 65.
- Druillon, letters sent to Dinwiddie, i. 149.
- "Dublin," the ship, Amherst embarks in her, ii. 51.
- Dublin, i. 419 note, ii. 190.
- Dubrowski, ii. 37 note.
- Du Cayla, ii. 427.
- Duchat, Captain, his description of Canadian life, i. 379, 380.
- Duchesnaye, ii. 20.
- Dufferin, Lord, ii. 37 note.
- Dumas has charge of the youth of Montcalm, i. 356; letter of, concerning Montcalm's education, i. 357, 358.
- Dumas, Captain, i. 208, ii. 361: at Fort Duquesne, i. 208; encounter with Braddock, i. 215-227; returns to Fort Duquesne, i. 220, 221; the border warfare encouraged by, i. 329, 330; quoted concerning his influence over the Indians, i. 329, 330; succeeds Contrecoeur at Fort Duquesne, i. 329, 426; efforts of the French to prevent the torture of prisoners, i. 330; commands the party to attack the English at Point Levi, ii. 215; his failure to dislodge the English, ii. 219; holds Cap-Rouge, ii. 228; to prevent Murray moving up the St. Lawrence, ii. 361; advances upon Montreal, ii. 364, 365; matters relating to a pension for, ii. 423, 424; receives the cross of the Order of St. Louis, ii. 426.
- Dumont, ii. 347, 348.
- Dunbar, Colonel Thomas, his troops, i. 200, 220 note, ii. 256; to take command of the rear division of Braddock's expedition, i. 206; reinforcements for Braddock, i. 223, 224; arrival at his camp, of a portion of Braddock's army, i. 224, 225; his course of action blamed by the colonies, i. 225; encamped at Great Meadows, i. 226; retreat of, i. 226, 329; arrival of his train at Fort Cumberland, i. 227; letter to, from Dinwiddie, quoted, i. 231, 232; exhorted to retrieve the English losses, i. 231, 232; his conduct wanting in courage, and condemned by Dinwiddie, i. 231-233, 233 note; instructions from his superior officers neglected, i. 233.
- "Dunkirk," the, chases the French vessels, i. 185, 186.
- Dunkirk, ii. 395; fortress of, ii. 395; the fortress to be destroyed, ii. 405, 406.
- "Dunkirk of America," the, ii. 52.
- Duquesne, Marquis, Governor of Canada, i. 41 note, 239; his opinion of Piquet, i. 67 note; his character and personal appearance, i. 85, 86; prepares to secure the upper part of the Ohio Valley, i. 86, 87; influenced by unworthy motives, i. 88; landing of his force at Presquisle, i. 128; instructions to Marin, i. 129; a fort to be built on French Creek, i. 130; plans of the expedition thwarted, i. 130, 131; return of a part of the expedition to Montreal, i. 131; letters of, compared with other writings, i. 181 note; Contrecoeur succeeds Saint-Pierre, i. 143, 144; succeeded by De Vaudreuil, i. 182, 288; orders sent to, from France, i. 183, 184; letter to Le Loutre concerning Acadia, i. 239; relations with Le Loutre, i. 239, 242; his harsh treatment of the Acadians, i. 244, 245; resigns his government,

- i. 288; his discipline over troops, i. 369.
- Duquesne, Fort, i. 147, 325, ii. 131; built by the French, i. 143, 144, 337 note; expedition of Jumonville, i. 148; reinforcements sent to, i. 152, 153; French force at, i. 159, 206; exultant return of Villiers to, i. 161; Braddock to lead the expedition against, i. 194, 196; parties sent out to interrupt General Braddock's march, i. 205, 206; Braddock's expedition against, i. 206-209, 214-233, ii. 423-426; situation and appearance of, i. 207, 208; command held by Contrecoeur, i. 208; number of Indians and Canadians at, i. 208, 209; Indians and French depart from, to fight with Braddock's expedition, i. 210-213, ii. 423-426; return of the French troops, i. 221; desire to attack a second time, i. 233; Dumas succeeds Contrecoeur in command, i. 329; plan of capture, i. 381; the attack abandoned, i. 382; report of the affair at Kittanning, i. 426, 427; the war-policy of Pitt, ii. 48, 131, 132; importance of position, ii. 48; expedition against, fitted out by the English, ii. 49, 129; approached by General Forbes's army, ii. 130-134, 138, 140, 141; M. de Ligneris, commandant of, ii. 141; French reinforcements sent to, ii. 141, 142; Indians near, sought as allies by English and French, ii. 142, 143; the missions of Frederic Post, ii. 144-151; Post invited to go thither, ii. 145; Grant's expedition, ii. 151-155; statistics concerning the daily rations, ii. 152 note; desperate condition of the French, ii. 155, 156; evacuated by the French, ii. 158, 159; garrison left by the English under Lieutenant-Colonel Mercer, ii. 160; effect of the English victory, ii. 162, 235; letter from Montcalm referring to matters there, ii. 163, 169.
- Durell, Admiral, ii. 192, 198; at Isle-aux-Coudres, ii. 203; arrival of his fleet in the St. Lawrence, ii. 203-206; ruse to obtain a pilot, ii. 204.
- Dürer, i. 433.
- Durham Terrace, ii. 355.
- Dury, interview with Braddock, i. 190.
- Dussieux, i. 514 note.
- Dutch, the, i. 287; in Pennsylvania, i. 31; trading interests at Albany, i. 32, 33, 65, 193, 195, 319, 320, 327; alienate the Mohawks, i. 171; their language, i. 221; at Schenectady, i. 321; hostile to Johnson, i. 328.
- Dutch Reformed Church, the, i. 32.
- Duvivier to accept the terms of capitulation for Louisbourg, ii. 73, 74.

E.

- Easton, Indian convention at, ii. 143, 147-150, 161.
- "Echo," the, number of her guns, ii. 54 note; captured by the English, ii. 63.
- Edinburgh, the University of, ii. 285.
- Edward, grandson of George II., name given to Fort Edward, i. 315.
- Edward, Fort, in Nova Scotia, i. 268, 270, 272, 275, 280.
- Edward, Fort, in New York, i. 388, 406, 441, 452, ii. 121, 432, 435; name given to Fort Lyman, i. 294, 315; winter life of the garrison, i. 350; difficulties of carrying stores to, i. 388; forces stationed here, i. 401; its condition, i. 401, 402, 403; Earl Loudon stationed at, i. 421; exposed condition of, i. 474, ii. 3; attacked by a party under Marin, i. 485; position of General Webb, i. 496, 497, 501, ii. 2; arrival of soldiers escaping from Fort William Henry, i. 511-513, ii. 428, 431; mutiny among the troops, ii. 2, 3; arrival of troops to aid Monro, ii. 2, 3; omission of Montcalm to attack, after his success at Fort William Henry, ii. 4, 167, 168; commanded by Captain Haviland, ii. 11; expedition of Rogers' rangers, ii. 11-16, 124; fortified by the English, ii. 237.
- Edwards, Jonathan, i. 27.
- Egmont, Cape, ii. 194.
- Elder, John, letter from, quoted, i. 344.
- Elizabeth of Russia, i. 18, ii. 389, 393, 403; her hatred of Frederic the Great, i. 353, ii. 389, 399; her death, ii. 399.
- Elizabeth Castle, i. 252.
- Emerson, Rev. Mr., ii. 120.
- England, i. 67, 310; her possessions in America, and questions of boundary, i. 1-3, 20-37, 56, 79, 90-92, 122-128, 132, 161, 168, 184, 236-238, 243; restoration of Cape Breton, by, i. 2, 3; result of the subjection of Canada, i. 3; her commerce, i. 3, 4; influence of the Seven Years War, i. 3, 4, ii. 38-40, 386, 408-414; religion, morals, and society under George II., i. 5-11; decline of the Tory power, i. 6; fall of the Stu-arts, i. 6; service rendered by Pitt, i. 9, ii. 40-47, 395-398, 400, 401; the army and navy, i. 9, 180, 181, ii. 380, 381, 400, 411; conditions of, after the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, i. 9; question of the mastery of India, i. 10; action taken by, at the time of the succession of Maria Theresa, i. 19; French and English population in America in 1754, compared, i. 20; success of, in establishing her colonies, and their condition, i. 22, 25, 29, 30, 33, 56, 126, 127, ii. 175-177, 401, 403, 411; importance of Piquetown and of Oswego, i. 52, 68, 70, 72, 325, 398, 399, 415; seeks to repel the French aggressions in the West, i. 53, 132-142; importance of securing the Iroquois Indians as allies, i. 63-65, 125, 372, 374; neglect of the British Assemblies, of their interests, i. 86; the possession of Acadia, i. 90, 93, 94, 123, 236, 253; conditions imposed on French inhabitants of Acadia, i. 90, 91; hostility of the Acadians and Indians encouraged by the French, i. 91, 94, 98-108, 235-240, 242-245, 264; the oath of allegiance to be taken by the Acadians, i. 91, 92, 97, 98, 106, 107, 235, 260, 265; bound by treaty to allow the Acadians freedom in religion, i. 95, 107; mildness of her rule over the Acadians, i. 95, 96, 121, 122, 261, 262; pretended peace made by the Indians, i. 104, 105; relations of Cornwallis with the Acadians, i. 107, 108; commissioners appointed to decide upon the boundaries of possessions in America, i. 123-127; the question of the pistole fee, i. 138, 140; attitude and policy of the home government, i. 171, 177-181; the southern department held by Sir Thomas Robinson, i. 179; regiments ordered to America, i. 181, 182; diplomatic correspondence of, i. 183; warlike intentions concealed from France, i. 183, 184; the plans of France known to, i. 184-186; Braddock despatched to America to take military command, i. 189-191; plans of Shirley laid before the government, i. 192, 193; supplies for Braddock's campaign scarce, i. 197, 198; questions of policy for the French and English in Acadia, i. 236-241; desire of the Acadians to return to their allegiance, i. 238, 244, 245; conditions leading to the removal of the Acadians from their home,

i. 253-266, 284 (see Acadians); results of the campaign of 1755, i. 328, 329; attitude of the population of Pennsylvania towards, i. 339; preys on French commerce, i. 352; declares war, i. 352; political outlook, i. 353, 354; Protestant country, i. 355; money granted by Parliament to the colonies, i. 382, 382 note; an armament fitted out for the reduction of Louisbourg, i. 469, 470, 472; the fleet of Holbourne wrecked, i. 472; disasters and victories in Europe, ii. 45-47; preparations to attack Louisbourg, ii. 49; prisoners of war sent to, ii. 76; rejoicing at the fall of Louisbourg, ii. 76, 77; preparations made to attack Quebec, ii. 176, 178, 193, 194; siege of Quebec, ii. 195-233, 259-325, 325 note, 326 note; news of Wolfe's death and his heroism, ii. 323, 324; the fall of Canada, ii. 360-382; end of the war in America, ii. 379-382; death of George II., ii. 390, 391; succession of George III., ii. 391; growth of a peace party, ii. 391, 392; changes among the officials, ii. 392, 393; the policy of George III., ii. 393-395, 400; terms of peace offered to, ii. 395; the negotiations of Choiseul with Pitt, ii. 395, 396; need of a peace with France, ii. 396; the Family Compact, ii. 396; the secret treaty made by Choiseul, ii. 396, 397; the policy of Bute, ii. 400; victories gained through the influence of Pitt, ii. 400-402; the conflict for colonial ascendancy, ii. 401, 403; expedition against Havana, ii. 401, 402; negotiations with France for peace, ii. 403-407; cessions made by France, ii. 405; restores Belleisle ii. 405; the treaty of peace signed at Paris, ii. 407, 408; results of the war, ii. 408-414; the growth of the United States, ii. 411-413. English, the, i. 52, 54; driven from the West by the French, i. 44-47, 59; 63-89; the French combine with the Indians to injure, i. 47, 64, 67, 68, 70, 72, 82, 83, 99, 100, 101, 104, 105, 113, 114, 130, 161, 171, 184, 203, 235, 236-239, 243-245, ii. 421; matters of interest concerning trade and traders, i. 50, 69, 70, 72-74, 79, 86, 87; orders given to the French governor with regard to, i. 78-82; attacked at Pickawillany, i. 84, 85; treatment of the Acadians, i. 91, 92, 95 (see Acadia and Acadians); the fortress of Louisbourg restored to France, i. 92; occupation of Beaubassin, i. 115-120; successful encounter with the French, i. 147, 148; the fight at Great Meadows, i. 156-161; results of the meeting of the colonial Assemblies with their governors, i. 163-169; rights of, on the Ohio River, i. 177; to intercept the French fleet, i. 185, 186; arrival of Braddock in America, i. 187, 191; matters pertaining to Braddock's expedition, i. 187, 191, 195, 197-200, 204-216; expedition given in charge to Johnson, i. 195; the battle of the Monongahela, i. 215-220, 223, 223 note; defeat of Braddock, and retreat of his troops, i. 220-235; death and burial of Braddock, i. 220, 224-226; Shirley made commander-in-chief of the army, i. 233; loyalty of the troops, i. 238, 239; plans of, in regard to the French, i. 239, 240; capture of Fort Beauséjour, i. 240-253; surrender of French forts, i. 253; removal of the Acadians from their homes, i. 254, 255, 265-284 (see Acadians); plan to increase the English population in Acadia, i. 257; disaster at Peticodiac, i. 275; expedition against Crown Point, i. 285-317; character of the army in the expedition, i. 290-292; preaching on Sunday to the army, i. 295, 296; an ambush prepared for, by Dieskau, i. 300; the battle of Lake George, i. 302-317; expedition of Shirley against Niagara, i. 318-329; arrive at Fort Oswego, i. 322; lack of supplies, i. 325, 326; Shirley leaves Oswego, i. 326; results of the campaign against the French, i. 328, 329; border warfare encouraged by the French, i. 329-350; conditions in Pennsylvania, i. 336-350; forts built to guard the Great Carrying Place, i. 374; prepare to attack Ticonderoga, i. 377-380, 387, 388; receive discouraging reports from Ticonderoga, i. 389, 390; the appointment of Earl Loudon as commander-in-chief, i. 383; payment of troops, and other matters pertaining to soldiers, i. 384-388; forest war, i. 389; action between Villiers and Bradstreet, i. 394-396; royal orders concerning provincial officers, i. 399, 400; condition of the New England troops, i. 401, 402; the loss of Oswego, i. 405-420; the Indians butcher the prisoners, i. 413, 414, 414 note; difficulties in the French war, i. 414-417; number of men under Earl Loudon, i. 421; the attack made on Kittanning, i. 423-427; despatches sent by Vaudreuil to France, concerning, i. 427; scouting-parties, i. 428, 429; at Fort William Henry, i. 428; the war-party of Perière, i. 429-431; exploits of Rogers' rangers, i. 433-437 (see Rogers); the difficulty in quartering the troops in winter, i. 439, 440; party sent by Vaudreuil to attack Fort William Henry, i. 447-451; capture French stores, i. 457; number of their antagonists, i. 468; plan for the reduction of Louisbourg, i. 468; delay in starting the fleet for Halifax, i. 469, 470, 472; fleet of Holbourne wrecked, i. 472; the attack and massacre of, at Fort William Henry, i. 474-478, 485-513, 514 note, ii. 4, 5, 237, 428-431; the tide turning, ii. 46; Loudon succeeded by Abercromby, in office, ii. 48; the Scotch Highlanders join the army, ii. 49; the typical British naval officer, ii. 50; the siege and reduction of Louisbourg, ii. 48, 49, 51, 55-82 note (see Louisbourg); expedition fitted out against, to serve under Abercromby, ii. 83-113 note; reforms in the army introduced by Lord Howe, ii. 90; effect of the death of Lord Howe, ii. 97, 98; the assault at Ticonderoga, ii. 103-107, 110-113; matters pertaining to life in the army, ii. 116, 117, 119, 120, 264, 334, 335, 339, 366; gain possession of Fort Frontenac, ii. 127-129; the reduction of Fort Duquesne, ii. 131-163; need of Indian allies, ii. 139, 140, 142-148; use of Western lands, ii. 146; expedition of Major Grant, ii. 151-155; burial of Braddock's slain, ii. 159, 160; Lieutenant-Colonel Mercer to hold Fort Duquesne, ii. 160, 161; the situation in 1758, ii. 162; expedition fitted out to serve under General Wolfe, ii. 182-184, 192-207; the siege and reduction of Quebec, ii. 207-234, 259-326 note (see Wolfe and Quebec); statistics concerning the army at the battle of Quebec, ii. 298 note, 305, 305 note, 442, 443, 436-438; bravery of the sailors, ii. 227, 228; capture of Ticonderoga and Crown Point by Amherst, ii. 235-240; spruce beer made in the army, ii. 236, 237; Fort Edward fortified, ii. 237; their general humanity, ii. 261, 262, 309; council of war held, ii. 272, 273; action of Holmes's squadron, ii. 278-280; love of the soldiers for their officers, ii. 281, 294, 295; loss of General Wolfe, ii. 294-297; the precision of their fire, ii. 295, 296; rule in Canada, ii. 332; skirmish at Lorette, ii. 337, 338; the battle of Sainte-Foy, ii. 342, 347-359, 442-444; the fall of Canada, ii. 360-382; embark for Montreal, ii. 363-366; passage of the rapids, ii. 370, 371; numerical superiority of their troops, ii. 381; recapture St. John's, ii. 402.

English colonies, the, condition of, as compared with French possessions, i. 1-3, 20, 21; inhabitants of, i. 20-22, 25; government of, i. 25, 26, 170, 171, 349, 350, 419; compared and examined, i. 25-36, 62, 126, 127; means of travel, i. 33; politics and religion in, i. 33-35, 137, 139, 170, 171, 349, 350, 419; plan of France to unite Louisiana and Canada against, i. 36, 37; hampered by the Assemblies, i. 137, 139; efforts to repel the French in the West, i. 137-141, 169, 175; plan of union of Franklin, i. 175; council of governors held with Braddock, i. 191-195; slaves in, i. 193; the frontier left unguarded, i. 227, 231, 232; distribution of the exiled Acadians, i. 282; mode of life of the frontier settler, i. 334-336; united against Canada, ii. 175; prediction of Mayhew for, ii. 325; predictions of several persons concerning their future in America, ii. 403, 404; symptoms of revolt shown, ii. 413.

English ministry. See British Ministry.

"Entreprenant," the number of her guns, ii. 54 note; burned at anchor, ii. 66.

Epicurus, ii. 389.

Episcopalians in the army, ii. 117.

Erie, town of, i. 89.

Eric, Lake, i. 38, 52, 486, ii. 247; the passage to Lake Huron, i. 75; desirability of erecting forts near, i. 80, 132.

Esopus, i. 422 note.

Espagnol, Port, ii. 78.

Espineuse, Madame d', ii. 176.

Estève, secretary of Montcalm, i. 361; his voyage, i. 364; his marriage, ii. 426.

Etechemin, River, the, ii. 274.

Etechemins, the, i. 23.

Eugene, Prince, i. 18; remark of, concerning the result of Charles VI.'s death, i. 18.

Europe, i. 479, ii. 133, 186; complication of political interests, i. 1-4, 353-355, ii. 175; the Seven Years War, i. 1, 18, ii. 38, 39, 386, 405, 406; power of the House of Bourbon, i. 9; power of Frederic II. of Prussia, i. 17; rule of the House of Austria, i. 16, 17; the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, i. 19; power and influence of Peter the Great, i. 17, 18; the princes pledged to sustain the will of Charles VI., i. 18, 19; the balance of power, i. 18, 126; grains and fruit of, growing in America, i. 76; question of American boundary, i. 123-128; war commenced between the powers of, i. 186; the peace of Paris, ii. 383-408; the conflict for colonial ascendancy, ii. 401; results of the victory of Plassey, ii. 408; the mastery of India, ii. 410; Catholicism in, ii. 412.

Exchequer, the, ii. 393.

Eyre, Major, occupies Fort William Henry, i. 439-441; party sent by Vaudreuil to reduce the fort, i. 447-451; requested to give up Fort William Henry, i. 449; his answer, and the result thereof, i. 449-451.

F.

Fabius, ii. 209.

Fairfax, Lord, letter from Dinwiddie, i. 139; letters from Colonel Innes, i. 226, 228.

Falmouth, i. 169, 310.

Falstaff, i. 142.

Family Compact, the, ii. 396.

Faneuil Hall, ii. 377.

Fare, Marquis de la, i. 358.

Feather dance, a, description of, i. 58.

Ferdinand, Prince of Brunswick, appointed to command, ii. 47; generalship of, ii. 47; action with Clermont, ii. 47.

Ferdinand VI. of Spain, death of, ii. 396.

Ferguson, ii. 57.

Feudalism, i. 10; in Canada and in the British colonies, i. 22, 31-33.

"Fidèle," the, number of her guns, ii. 54 note.

Fiedmont, ii. 314.

Fielding, i. 6, 189.

Fifty-eighth Regiment, the, ii. 298 note.

Fireships, ii. 201, 203; descend upon the English, ii. 210-212.

First Lord of the Treasury, the, ii. 400.

Fish, Jane. See Pompadour.

- Fisheries, the, ii. 405, 407, 410.
- Fitch, Colonel, letter to Winslow, i. 388; his regiment, ii. 94; encounter with Langy in the woods, ii. 97.
- Five Mile Point, i. 442, ii. 102.
- Five Nations, the, i. 38, 40, 45, 49, 67, 68, 130, ii. 7, 86; dialects of, i. 44; adopt Catharine Montour, i. 54; efforts of the French to gain as allies, and to cause the destruction of the English, i. 59, 64, 78, 203, 371, 372, 466, ii. 143, 144; their influence and position, i. 63-65, 125, 372, 374; power of Johnson over, i. 64, 172, 195, 287, 288, 390-393; their missionary, i. 68, 487, ii. 418; their country disposed of in the treaty of Utrecht, i. 79, 125, 126 note; range of their war-parties, i. 125; orders sent from Dinwiddie, i. 139; at Fort Duquesne, i. 154; the congress at Albany, i. 173-176; Indian commissioners treated by, i. 195; Johnson made Indian superintendent, i. 287, 288, 390; homes of, i. 319; the fur trade, i. 320; conferences held with, by Shirley, i. 327; border warfare, i. 329; the spies, i. 374; council called by Montcalm, i. 485-489; join in the attack upon Fort William Henry, i. 490; Indian convention, ii. 142, 143; declare their alliance with the English, ii. 148, 244; the fight at Niagara, ii. 247; their totems on a flag of Piquet, ii. 418.
- Flanders, ii. 184.
- Flat Point, ii. 57.
- Flat Point Cove, ii. 61.
- Flatheads, the, i. 68.
- Fleurimont, i. 486.
- Flogging, ii. 236.
- Florence, ii. 323.
- Florida, i. 20; ceded by Spain to England, ii. 405, 406.
- Foligny, M. de, his journal, ii. 438, 441; matters relating to the death of Montcalm, ii. 441, 442.
- Folsom, Captain, i. 308, 309.
- Fontbrune, aide-de-camp of General Montcalm, i. 498.
- Fontenoy, battle of, i. 8, 19.
- Forbes, Rev. Eli, pastor at Brookfield, ii. 378, 379; his sermon on the fall of Canada, ii. 378, 379.
- Forbes, Brigadier John, ii. 49; the reduction of Fort Duquesne, ii. 49, 130-163; his early life, ii. 132; his route and plan of attack, ii. 133-147, 156, 157; compared with Braddock, ii. 134; his relations with Washington, ii. 134, 137, 138; his relations with Bouquet, ii. 134, 135; letter to Pitt concerning his provincials, ii. 135; his sickness, ii. 135-137, 157, 161, 162; his letters to Bouquet quoted, ii. 136-138, 142, 157; erects Fort Bedford, ii. 141; messages of peace sent to the Indians, ii. 144-151; Grant's expedition, ii. 151-155; names the settlement of Pittsburg, ii. 159, 244; finds Fort Duquesne evacuated, ii. 159; letter to Amherst, ii. 161; leaves Fort Duquesne, ii. 161; the homeward march retarded by illness, ii. 161, 162; effect of his expedition, ii. 162; his death and burial, ii. 162.
- Forests in the West, the, i. 205.
- Fort Hill, ii. 76.
- Forty-fourth Regiment, the, i. 219 note.
- Forty-seventh Regiment, the, ii. 298 note.
- Forty-third Regiment, the, ii. 182, 298 note.
- "Foudroyant," the, captured by the English, ii. 49, 50.
- Fox, Henry, i. 8, 179.
- Foxcroft, Thomas, pastor of the "Old Church" in Boston, ii. 377; his sermon on the occasion of the fall of Canada, ii. 377.
- Foxes, the, called to a council by Montcalm, i. 486-489.
- France, i. 9, 67, 148, 243, 353, 365, 377, 456, 486, 491, ii. 29, 43, 49, 286, 401, 402; alliance with Austria, i. 2; her possessions in America, i. 1-3, 20, 24, 25, 37, 40, 41, 43, 45, 59, 62-67, 76, 79 note, 122-128, 318, ii. 403, 404, 410; influence of the Seven Years War upon, i. 3, 4, ii. 410; condition of, under Louis XV., i. 9-16; her commanders, i. 10; her army and navy, i. 10, 180, 181, 368-373, 461, 462, ii. 380, 381, 401, 410; the persecution of the Huguenots, i. 14, 21, 22; growing disrespect for the clergy and ministry, i. 15; takes part with Bavaria, i. 19; French and English population in America in 1754 compared, i. 20, 21; rule established by, in Canada, i. 22; forts held by, in America, i. 40, 41, 75, 76, 318; leaden plates given to Céloron to bury in America, i. 43, 45, 48, 62 note; missions established by, among the Indians, i. 64-67; the treaty of Utrecht, i. 79; cession of Acadia to England, i. 90, 93, 94; French maxims of duty to the King, i. 106; the Acadians ordered to swear allegiance to, i. 120,

121; balance of power, i. 127; the marine and colonial department, i. 179; conditions of rule in, i. 179, 180; diplomatic representatives of, i. 179, 180, 183; expedition of war ordered to America, i. 182; her naval and military plans, i. 183-186; the Acadians French at heart, i. 235-237; questions of policy for the French and English in Acadia, i. 236-241; corruption among the officials, i. 242, ii. 22-28, 44, 385, 386; conditions leading to the expulsion of the Acadians from their home, i. 253-266 (see Acadians); expedition fitted out against Crown Point, i. 235, 286; expedition sent to America under Dieskau, i. 288; results of the campaign, i. 328, 329; attitude of Pennsylvania towards, i. 339; war declared between England and, i. 352, 353; political combinations in Europe, i. 353-356; alliance sought by Maria Theresa, i. 354; Montcalm to succeed Dieskau, i. 356; paucity of troops sent to America, i. 363; troops sent against Austria, i. 363; attitude of Governor Vaudreuil towards, i. 366-368; growth of political parties in Canada, i. 367, 368; Indian allies, i. 372, 466, 467, ii. 142-145, 162, 381; her communication with the West, i. 415; causes of the English losses, i. 417-419; information from England obtained through Florence Hensey, i. 469; the war with England subordinate to personal politics, i. 469; prospects at the time of Pitt, ii. 45; loss of Louisbourg, ii. 71-75; inhabitants of Louisbourg sent to, ii. 76; victory of Montcalm at Ticonderoga, ii. 111, 112; appeals made in behalf of Canada, ii. 173-176; promotions of Montcalm and others, ii. 174; scant assistance given to Canada, ii. 175; the loss of Quebec, ii. 195-234, 259-326 note; funeral of Montcalm, ii. 309, 310; Lévis sends for aid, ii. 354; loss of Montreal and Canada, ii. 373, 374; return of the troops, ii. 374, 383, 384; end of the war in America, ii. 379-382; her victories, ii. 381; trial of those accused of peculation in Canada, ii. 385, 386; political situation in 1761, ii. 393-395; terms of peace offered to England, ii. 395; the negotiations of Choiseul, ii. 395, 396; provisions of the Family Compact, ii. 396; her enemies in Europe, ii. 399, 400; her financial condition in 1762, ii. 402,

403; negotiations with England for peace, ii. 403-407; possessions ceded by, ii. 405; privileges of fishing, ii. 405, 407; the fortress of Dunkirk to be destroyed, ii. 406; a secret agreement made with Spain, ii. 406; the treaty of peace signed at Paris, ii. 407; her influence in the East, ii. 410; under Colbert, ii. 410; her power on the continent of Europe, ii. 410, 411.

Franklin, Benjamin, i. 27; his plan of union for the colonies, i. 175; his relations with Braddock, i. 188, 198, 199; his position in the Assembly of Pennsylvania, i. 198, 199, 338; account of Braddock's death, i. 225, 226; the defeat of the English, i. 228; bill drawn by, i. 348 note; his policy, i. 349; his opinion of Shirley and of Loudon, i. 421, 470; remark of, concerning the union of the British colonies, ii. 404.

Franquet, ii. 70, 71; sent to strengthen Louisbourg, ii. 18; his journal, ii. 18; his account of a travelling party in Canada, ii. 18-21.

Fraser, his trading-house, i. 133 note, 213; Washington at his house, i. 136.

Fraser, Colonel, his Highlanders serve under Wolfe, ii. 59, 231, 298 note, 443; Canadian prisoners, ii. 226.

Fraser, Hon. Malcolm, anecdote of Montcalm, ii. 297 note.

Frederic William of Prussia, i. 17.

Frederic II. of Prussia, i. 2, 17, ii. 38; his youth and training, i. 17; seizes the province of Silesia, i. 19; political conditions in his realm, i. 353, 354; combination against, i. 355, 356, ii. 38-40; the Seven Years War, ii. 38-40, 409; the battle of Prague, ii. 39; confidence felt in Pitt, ii. 46; his glory in 1758, ii. 386; his reverses and trials, ii. 387-389, 398, 399; his letters to D'Argens, ii. 387-389, 390; the campaigns of 1760 and 1761, ii. 387-390; letter to Voltaire, ii. 388; Russia becomes the ally of, ii. 399; the treaty of Hubertsburg, ii. 407; his dominions intact, ii. 409; numbers lost in the Seven Years War, ii. 409.

Frederic, Fort, i. 24, 378.

French, the, i. 28; effect of the Seven Years War upon, i. 1, 3, ii. 40, 409; their efforts to gain and retain Indian allies, i. 28, 41, 42, 47, 48, 57, 63, 65, 130, 135, 161, 171, 175, 328-330, 374, 423, 425, 467, 478, 479, 484-487, ii. 4, 5, 143, 149-151; attacks made on

New England, i. 28, 168; fur-trade, the, i. 37; New France connected by forts, i. 40, 41; desire to control the West, i. 16, 53, 72, 73, 86-88, 169, 170, 176, 197, 233, ii. 146; missions among the Indians, i. 41, 42, 64, 65-67; matters relating to trade, i. 64, 65, 69-73, 86, 399; methods of warfare and organization, i. 73, 143, 144, 409, 472; the attack at Pickawillany, i. 84, 85; conditions of residence of, in Acadia, i. 90, 91; injurious influence of, upon the Acadians, i. 91, 96, 97, 99-108, 109, 121, 235-238, 243-245, 248, 257, 258, 265, 266, 266 note; officials and priests aid the Indians to destroy the English, i. 98-108, 113, 114, 168, 236, 329-350, ii. 248, 374, 421; double-dealing, i. 103, 104, 105 note, 106 note, 115; relations with Cornwallis, i. 107, 108; occupation of Beaubassin by the English, i. 115-120; the murder of Captain Howe, i. 118, 119; questions of boundary, i. 122-127, 184, 236-238; forts erected by, i. 128, 130, 143; expedition of Duquesne to the Ohio, i. 128-135, 143-161; efforts of Dinwiddie to repel, in the West, i. 132-161; prepare for war, i. 143, 144, 150, 154, 155, 169; alleged causes of Jumonville's expedition, i. 147-149; fight between Washington and Villiers, i. 153-161; opinions expressed by the Indians concerning, i. 173, 174; aid to be expected from the Catholics, i. 193; try to interrupt Braddock's march, i. 205, 206; the encounter with Braddock's forces, i. 210-227; their method of warfare, i. 215-219; death of Braddock, i. 220, 225, 226; return of the troops, i. 221; treatment of their prisoners, i. 222, 223; losses of, in the battle of the Monongahela, i. 223; their standard planted on Beauséjour, i. 235, 247; matters pertaining to the army, i. 238, 241, 247, 368, 368 note, 421, 439, 461-465, 468, ii. 54, 55, 364, 373, 374, 383, 384; hostile designs of, i. 243; encounter with the English at Beauséjour, i. 248-253; burn Fort St. John, i. 253; conditions leading to the expulsion of the Acadians, examined, i. 253-266 (see Acadia and Acadians); expedition fitted out against Crown Point, i. 285, 286; prepare to defend Crown Point, i. 288, 289, 293; advance of Dieskau's forces to meet Johnson, i. 296, 297, 299; the battle of Lake George, i.

304-317; their losses, i. 312, 312 note, 313; occupy Ticonderoga, i. 313, 389, 390, 442, 478, ii. 104; strength of their position at Niagara, i. 318, 325; expedition of Shirley against Niagara, i. 318-329; the troops at Fort Frontenac, i. 324, 408; results of the campaign, i. 328, 329; building of Fort Duquesne, i. 337 note; their settlements on the Ohio molested, i. 340; on the march against Virginia, i. 343; arrival of Montcalm, i. 365, 366; camps of Montcalm, i. 373; Fort Bull taken by, i. 374, 375; letter of Montreuil quoted, i. 376, 377; expedition fitted out to defend Ticonderoga, i. 377, 378; preparations of Shirley for war, i. 384; action between Villiers and Bradstreet, i. 394-396; the capture of Oswego, i. 397-420; their losses, i. 414; rumors of attack at Lake George, i. 422; reduction of Fort Granville, i. 423; their war-parties, i. 429-431, 437, 438; dealings of Rogers' rangers with, i. 431, 432, 443, 444, ii. 122-124, 256, 257; a war-party sent to attack Fort William Henry, i. 446-451; the seat of war, i. 453, 454; their ships-of-war, i. 473 note; the capture of Fort William Henry, i. 474-513, 514 note, ii. 428-431; officers of the Indians, i. 486; circular letter sent by Montcalm to the officers, i. 489; official knavery, ii. 22-38; routed at Rossbach, ii. 46; change of commanders, ii. 47; the siege and reduction of Louisbourg, ii. 48, 49, 51-82 note (see Louisbourg); their ships burned off Louisbourg, ii. 66, 67, 69; treatment received by prisoners from the English, ii. 81, 128; expedition against Ticonderoga, ii. 86-113 note (see Ticonderoga); losses of, ii. 110; mistake occurring from the waving of a handkerchief, ii. 107; serve under Marin, ii. 122; loss of Fort Frontenac, ii. 127-129; vessels on Lake Ontario taken by the British, ii. 128; loss of the command of Lake Ontario, ii. 129; loss of Fort Duquesne, ii. 131-163; reinforcements sent to Fort Duquesne, ii. 141, 142; loss of Indian allies, ii. 143, 149-151; encounter with Major Grant, ii. 151-155; retreat from Fort Duquesne, ii. 158, 159; effect of the Indian conference at Easton, ii. 161; effect of the loss of Fort Duquesne, ii. 162; the situation in 1758, ii. 162; letter from Doreil to the minister of war, ii. 162, 163; Montcalm desires his recall, ii. 164; alarming condition of Canada, ii. 169-173; danger to the shipping, ii. 172; siege and reduction of Quebec, ii. 195-234, 259-299, 325, 326 note (see Quebec and Wolfe); measures of defence taken by Montcalm, ii. 198-203; the camp, ii. 208, 209; the fire-ships let loose upon the enemy, ii. 210-212; opposition to the work at Point Lévi, ii. 215; Dumas' expedition unsuccessful, ii. 215; preserve the defensive, ii. 219; the Canadians desert their cause, ii. 219, 222, 223, 366; Niagara attacked and captured, ii. 222, 238, 242-249; affair of the Montmorenci, ii. 228, 233, 259; at Isle-aux-Noix, ii. 238, 239, 241, 249, 250; loss of Ticonderoga, ii. 239, 265; Crown Point abandoned, ii. 240, 241, 265; effort to recover Pittsburgh, ii. 244; their fear of the Indians, ii. 248, 374; parishes laid waste, ii. 260, 261; barbarities of Vaudreuil, ii. 262; fear of losing supplies, ii. 264, 293; Montcalm poorly supported, ii. 281, 281 note, 292, 293; the army routed, ii. 297-302, 307, 308; statistics concerning the army at the battle of Quebec, ii. 298 note, 305, 436-438; the protecting care of Montcalm, ii. 309; the death and burial of Montcalm, ii. 309, 310; confusion in the army, ii. 312; Lévis assumes command, ii. 313; the army to retrace their steps, ii. 313, 314; the campaign and its actors misrepresented by Vaudreuil, ii. 318-323; the English threatened, ii. 335, 336; at Le Calvaire, ii. 336; encounter with the English under Major Dalling, ii. 336; skirmish at Lorette, ii. 337; efforts to renew the conflict at Quebec, ii. 338; the troops during the winter, ii. 339, 340; Lévis's expedition to attack Quebec, ii. 341-358; occupy Sainte-Foy, ii. 344, 345, 442-444; the battle between Murray and Lévis, ii. 347-350; the English retreat, ii. 350-352; available force of fighting men, ii. 360; small resources left in Canada, ii. 360; fall of Canada, ii. 360-382; plans of Amherst, ii. 361, 362; the English fleet sails for Montreal, ii. 363-366; advance upon Montreal, ii. 365; Fort Lévis captured, ii. 369, 370; the articles of capitulation for Montreal, ii. 372, 373; cruelties of the Indians encouraged by, ii. 373; Canada passes to the crown of England, ii. 374; return of the troops to France, ii. 374, 383, 384; fly before Frederic, ii. 386; driven from Pondicherry, ii. 400; capture St. John's, and lose it again, ii. 402; payment offered for English scalps, ii. 421. French Academy, the, i. 357. French Catharine's Town, i. 54 note. French Creek, i. 45, 130, 133, 168; former name of, i. 128. French Indians, i. 58; narrow escape of Washington, i. 136. French Mountain, i. 300, 309, ii. 92. French Revolution, the, i. 18. Freshwater Cove, ii. 57, 58; attacked and taken by the English, ii. 58-61; known by other names, ii. 59 note. Friponne, La, ii. 24. Frontenac, Fort, i. 38, 68, ii. 114, 155; return of Céloron de Bienville, i. 52; action of the French in regard to ship-building, i. 72, 73; reception offered to Father Piquet, i. 74; proposed capture of, i. 32, 324, 374, 381, 393; position of, i. 324; held by the French, i. 374, 376, 415; the attack abandoned, i. 399; arrival of Montcalm, i. 407; taken by the British, ii. 127-130; dismantled, ii. 129, 162. Fry, Joshua, Colonel, i. 142, 145; despatches from Washington, i. 151; illness of, i. 151; his death, i. 151. Frye, Colonel, i. 405 note; disaster to the English, i. 275; number killed at Fort Edward, i. 485 note; sent with a detachment to Fort William Henry, i. 496; the massacre at Fort William Henry, i. 508-513, 513 note, 514 note, ii. 429, 430. Fundy, Bay of, i. 237, 239, 247, 261, 268, ii. 78, 79; dikes on, i. 258. Fur-trade, the, i. 37, 41, 50, 64, 72, 76, 103, 320, 369, ii. 24, 27, 403.

G.

Gabarus Bay, ii. 57. Gage, Lieutenant-Colonel, i. 212; in Braddock's expedition, i. 214, 216; in the battle of the Monongahela, i. 219; rallies his troops, i. 224; his infantry under Abercromby, ii. 93; letter from Amherst, ii. 240, 241; sent to supersede Johnson, ii. 249. Galissonière, Comte de la, governor of Canada, i. 43, 45, 53 note; effort to have the population of Canada increased, i. 21; his plans for uniting Canada and Louisiana, i. 36, 37; his personal appearance, i. 36;

- message given to the Indians, i. 47; soldiers sent to protect Piquet's mission, i. 66, 68; honorably recalled from office, i. 77; persons induced to settle at Detroit, i. 77 note; questions of boundary, i. 122, 123.
- Ganouskie Bay, i. 490.
- Gardiner, Captain, captures the ship "Foudroyant," ii. 49, 50; mortally wounded, ii. 50.
- Gardner, i. 443.
- Garneau, ii. 443, 444.
- Gasconade, ii. 171, 194 note, 204.
- Gaspé, i. 125, 491, ii. 80, 81, 354.
- Gaspereau, Fort, at Baye Verte, i. 253; surrender of, to the English, i. 253.
- Gates wounded in battle, i. 219.
- General Court of Massachusetts, the, i. 26, 290, 404; method of raising troops, i. 384-387.
- General Hospital of Quebec, the, ii. 411; crowded with sick, ii. 265, 304, 305; the nuns care for the sick, ii. 330, 331-335.
- Genesee, i. 71.
- Genesee Falls, i. 71.
- George II., King of England, i. 288, 316, 320, 321, 332, ii. 40, 81, 191; society, morals, and religion during his reign, i. 5-9; his possessions in the West, i. 53, 133, 134, 141; the oath of allegiance to be taken by the Acadians, i. 91, 92-98, 265; forts to be erected on the Ohio, i. 137; plans of colonial union, i. 175, 176; his speech concerning America, i. 181; American regiments to be taken into his pay, i. 194; remark concerning Governor Sharpe, i. 201, 202; his orders to the Acadians, i. 270, 273, 274; the Acadians disloyal to, i. 260; the Acadians declared prisoners, i. 274; his name given to Lake George, i. 295, 315; the rank of provincial officers, i. 399; the fall of Louisbourg, ii. 76; troops called for, ii. 83; secret instructions to Wolfe, ii. 194 note; the victory at Quebec, ii. 323, 324, 340; the fall of Canada, ii. 360; Louisbourg to be abandoned, ii. 363; his death, ii. 390, 391.
- George III., succeeds to the throne of England, ii. 391; his character and opinions, ii. 391-394, 397; growth of a peace-party, ii. 391, 392; the negotiation with France broken off, ii. 396; quarrels with Newcastle, ii. 400; desires peace with France, ii. 402; resistance of the British colonies, ii. 413.
- George, Fort, ii. 76, 237; erection of, i. 295; condition of, i. 411.
- George, Lake, i. 294, 296, 380, 388, 401, 421, 441, 446, 448, 452, ii. 12, 14, 15, 76, 80, 115, 129; its beauty of scenery, i. 295; the name given to, by Johnson, i. 295, 315; advance of Dieskau's army, i. 299; conditions at the camp of, i. 814, 315; its former name, 315; winter life of the garrisons, i. 350; scouting-party sent out, i. 427-429; exploits of Rogers' rangers, i. 433-437; the French camp, i. 438, 477, 478; the English camp, i. 440, 441; exposed condition of the forts, i. 474, 475; position of Ticonderoga, i. 477, ii. 99; advance of Montcalm's forces upon Fort William Henry, i. 485-491; voyage of the troops on their way to attack Ticonderoga, ii. 86-88, 92, 94; arrangement of Montcalm's troops, ii. 104; mustering-place of the armies at the head of, ii. 236.
- George, Lake, the battle of, i. 291 note, 304-317, 328.
- Georgia, i. 33; English possessions, i. 20; distribution of the exiled Acadians, i. 282.
- Germain, Father, efforts against the English, i. 100, 101, 103; the fight at Beaubassin, i. 117.
- German Flats, i. 321, 406; attacked by Vaudreuil, ii. 6, 7.
- German States, the, ii. 38, 39.
- German War, the, ii. 405.
- Germanic Empire, the, i. 16, 17, ii. 38; decay of, i. 17; hostile to Frederick II., ii. 399.
- Germans, the, ii. 6, 45, 47, 132; in Pennsylvania, i. 31, 166, 193, 339, 347, 348; their language spoken in New York, i. 32.
- Germany, ii. 117; destiny of, involved with that of Prussia, i. 17; intrigue formed by France, concerning, i. 19; the convention of Kloster-Zeven, ii. 45; political situation in 1761, ii. 391-395; recreation of, ii. 408; results of the Seven Years War, ii. 409.
- Gethen, Captain, i. 227.
- Gibraltar, garrisons of, i. 9; governorship of General Braddock, i. 189, 190, 190 note.
- Gibraltar, Straits of, ii. 49.
- Giddings, Captain, ii. 123 note.
- Gilchrist, ii. 435, 436.
- Gilson, George, i. 227.
- Girard, priest at Cobequid, i. 106, ii. 427; oath required of, i. 106, 107; his honorable action, i. 107; corres- pondence with Longueuil, i. 107; quotation from, concerning the Acadian emigrants, i. 109, 110.

- Gist, Christopher, i. 42, 133; sent to select land for settlers, i. 53, 54-59; his expedition to Ohio, i. 53; his description of a feather dance, i. 58; adventure with Indians, i. 136; his journal, i. 136 note; joins Washington, i. 146, 151; his settlement, i. 151, 157; council held by Washington, i. 153; his buildings burned, i. 161; reached by the retreating troops of Braddock, i. 224; orders given by Braddock to, i. 226.
- Gladwin, wounded in the battle of the Monongahela, i. 219.
- Glasgow, ii. 185.
- Glazier, Colonel, i. 404.
- Glen, Governor of South Carolina, i. 176; correspondence with Dinwiddie, i. 176, 177.
- Gnadenhütten settlement destroyed by the Indians, i. 347.
- Goat Island, ii. 53.
- Goldsmith, his Life of Nash, i. 188.
- "Goodwill," the, ii. 204.
- Gordon, Mr., i. 403; engineer in Braddock's expedition, i. 215.
- Gorée ii. 400; Island of, restored to France, ii. 406.
- Gorham, Captain, reconnoitres Louisbourg, i. 471.
- Governor's Palace, the, i. 142, 163.
- Governors of America, the, position of, i. 170, 171, 282; matter of raising money for the campaigns, i. 195; council held with Braddock, i. 191-195; jealousies between the Assemblies and, i. 419, 420.
- Gradis and Son, ii. 23; official knavery, ii. 23, 24.
- Graham, Rev. John of Suffield, Conn., i. 402; his accounts of the condition of the provincial camp, i. 402-404; his Diary quoted, i. 403, 404.
- Grand Battery, the, ii. 55; abandoned by the French, ii. 61.
- Grand Menan, the, ii. 183.
- Grand Pré, the, i. 94, 106, 260, 263; its inhabitants, i. 264, 269, 270; meadows of, i. 268; origin of its name, i. 269; encampment of Winslow, i. 269; the inhabitants summoned to hear the King's orders, i. 271, 272-276; the removal of the Acadians, i. 277-279.
- Grant, Ensign, the attack upon Louisbourg, ii. 59.
- Grant, Major, his expedition, ii. 151-155; surrounded and captured, ii. 153-155.
- Grant, Mrs. Anne, recollections of Albany, i. 320; her "Memoirs of an American Lady," cited, i. 320, ii. 91 note.
- Grant's Hill, ii. 140; origin of the name, ii. 151.
- Granville, Earl, i. 8, ii. 397; letter from Dinwiddie to, quoted, i. 176; angry reply given to Pitt, ii. 397, 398; remarks on his death-bed, ii. 408.
- Granville, Fort, attacked by the French and Indians, i. 423.
- Gray, words of Wolfe concerning the Elegy, ii. 285, 286.
- Gray, Sergeant James, letter to his brother quoted, i. 321.
- Gray, John, letter from James Gray, i. 321.
- Great Carrying Place, the, i. 293, 321, 393, ii. 242; guarded by the English, i. 374; fort rebuilt by Shirley, i. 384; the fort burned, i. 406; new fort to be erected, ii. 129.
- Great Company, the, in Canada, i. 283.
- Great Cove, the settlement destroyed, i. 343.
- Great Kenawha, the, i. 48; plate buried by the French near, i. 48.
- Great Lakes, the, i. 75, 124.
- Great Meadows, the, i. 145; Washington assembles his force, i. 146, 151, 153; the fight at, i. 157-159, 161; encampment of Dunbar, i. 226.
- Great Miami, the, i. 50, 55; neighboring country described, i. 55, 56.
- Great Savage Mountain, the, i. 205.
- Greeks, the, i. 407, ii. 323.
- Green and Russell, Messrs., ii. 442.
- Green, his "History of the English People" cited, ii. 408, 408 note.
- Green Bay, i. 84; fraudulent trade, ii. 27.
- Green Mountains, i. 453.
- Grenada, ii. 401; ceded by France, ii. 405.
- Grenadines, the, ii. 405.
- Grenville, Mr., ii. 194 note.
- Gridley, Colonel, i. 401.
- Grignon, Pierre, ii. 425.
- Guadeloupe, ii. 400; question of its comparative value with that of Canada, ii. 403; restored by England, ii. 405.
- Guienne, the battalion of, i. 182, ii. 104, 109, 230, 232; advances upon Fort William Henry, i. 491; guards Fort Frontenac, i. 376; the capture of Oswego, i. 408; camp of, i. 477; ordered to encamp on the Plains of Abraham, ii. 276; encamps by the St. Charles, ii. 285, 290, 292.

Guinea, the French driven from, ii. 47.

Gumley, Colonel, i. 189.

H.

Hague, i. 423.

Hainaut, i. 353.

Haldinand, Colonel, ii. 242; attacked by the French, ii. 242, 243.

Hale, George S., i. 404 note.

Half-King, chief of the Indians on the Ohio, i. 130; aids and accompanies Washington, i. 133, 145, 146, 151, 152, 160; efforts of Saint-Pierre to entice away his Indians, i. 135; council held with Half-King by Washington, i. 146, 147; boast concerning the death of Jumonville, i. 151 note; his comments on the fight at Great Meadows, i. 160.

Half-Moon, i. 384, 452, ii. 119.

Haliburton, statement from, i. 277 note.

Halifax, Lord, on the Board of Trade, i. 179; letter from Dinwiddie to, i. 229; letter from Winslow, i. 278.

Halifax, i. 93, 101, 104, 106, 113, 115, 196, 239, 243, 255, ii. 1, 277; foundation and growth of, i. 92, 93; meeting of deputies from Acadia with Cornwallis, i. 97, 98; questions of ownership, i. 124; hearing given to the Acadians, i. 260-265; destined port of the English fleet, i. 469, 470; fleet sails for, under Admiral Boscawen, ii. 51; departure of Boscawen's ships, ii. 56; arrival of Admiral Saunders, ii. 192.

Halifax, Fort, i. 183, 184 note.

Halket, Sir Peter, attacked by the French, i. 216-219; shot in battle, i. 219, 227; burial of his remains, ii. 160.

Halket, son of Sir Peter, shot in battle, i. 219; his remains discovered, ii. 160.

Halket, Major, ii. 432; discovers his father's body, ii. 160; letter from Tomahawk Camp, ii. 161, 162.

Hamilton, James, Governor of Pennsylvania, i. 42, 54, 56; his opinion of English traders, i. 42; correspondence with Dinwiddie, i. 42 note, 141; receives a message from the Miamis and Hurons, i. 57 note; desirability of an Indian alliance, i. 59; tries to build a trading-house on the Ohio, i. 59, 60; result of the meeting of, with the Assembly of Pennsylvania, i. 165-168; succeeded by Governor Morris, i. 167.

Hampton, arrival of Braddock, i. 187; arrival of regiments at, i. 191.

Hanbury, John, i. 140; stockholder in the Ohio Company, i. 53, 196; extracts from his correspondence with Dinwiddie, i. 140, 141, 144; error ascribed to, i. 196.

Hanbury, Mrs., i. 144.

Hancock, a Boston merchant, i. 245; furnishes money for the English troops, i. 245.

Handfield, Major, in command at Annapolis, i. 267; instructions to expel the Acadians, i. 267; letter from, to Winslow, i. 274, 275; letter of Winslow concerning the removal of the Acadians, i. 277, 277 note.

Hannibal, ii. 209.

Hanover, i. 5, 8, 353, ii. 40, 47, 49, 391, 392, 400; possessions of England in, i. 19; restorations made by France, ii. 405.

Hardy, Major, to hold the Point of Orleans, ii. 216, 217, 219.

Hardy, Sir Charles, Governor of New York, i. 383, 470; opposition to Shirley, i. 383; orders issued to scatter the Nova Scotia settlers, ii. 80, 81.

Harris, John, sufferings of the settlers, i. 343.

Harris, Mary, story of, i. 55.

Harris, Thomas, English scout, i. 415, 416.

Harry, ii. 390.

Hartwell Library, the, ii. 219 note.

Hauteur-de-la-Potence, ii. 66.

Havana, expedition of Pococke, ii. 401; conquered, ii. 402; returned to Spain, ii. 405.

Haviland, Colonel, commander at Fort Edward, ii. 11; the fall of Canada, ii. 361-382; opens communication with Murray, ii. 368; encamped near Montreal, ii. 372.

Hawke, Sir Edward, ii. 50; his character, ii. 50, 51.

Hawley, Elisha, his wounds, i. 302, 311; his last letter to his brother quoted, i. 302.

Hawley, Joseph, i. 302.

Hay, Ensign, killed at Beauséjour, i. 250.

Hay, Sir Charles, i. 471.

Hazen, Captain Moses, ii. 351; the encounter at Beauséjour, i. 249; his courage, i. 428; skirmish at Lorette, ii. 337; the battle between Lévis and Murray, ii. 347-350.

Hebecourt, Captain, stationed at Ticonderoga, ii. 11; receives a reinforcement of Indians, ii. 12; Bour-

- Iamaque leaves him in charge, ii. 238, 239.
- Helots, i. 465.
- Henderson, ii. 296.
- Hendrick, chief of the Mohawks, i. 301; his arrival at New York, i. 171, 172; speech made at Albany, i. 173, 174; his advice to Johnson, i. 301; encounter with Dieskau, i. 301, 302; killed in battle, i. 302, 303, 309.
- Henry IV., ii. 9.
- Hensey, Florence, a spy at London, i. 469.
- Herbin, i. 486; skirmish with Captain MacDonald, ii. 336, 337.
- Herkimer, Fort, ii. 7.
- Hermitage, the, ii. 21.
- "Héros," the, ship, i. 362.
- Hertel, i. 486.
- Highlanders, the, ii. 93, 151, 185; their bravery, ii. 109, 232; serve under Forbes, ii. 132-163; their comrades exposed on poles, ii. 159; action at Quebec, ii. 232, 233, 261, 262, 286, 437; the slogan, ii. 296; encounter with the Canadians, ii. 300; their costume insufficient in Canada, ii. 334, 335; encounter with the French, ii. 336.
- Hobbs, Captain, i. 270, 272.
- Hocquart, Captain, fate of the "Alcide," i. 185, 186; encounter with Captain Howe, i. 186.
- Hocquart, Intendant, financial condition of Canada, ii. 32.
- Hodges, Captain, i. 429.
- Hogarth, i. 6.
- Holbourne, Admiral Francis, ordered to intercept the French fleet, i. 184, 185; commands the English fleet to sail for America, i. 469, 470; his arrival at Halifax, i. 470; approaches Louisbourg, i. 471; his fleet wrecked, i. 472.
- Holdernes, Earl of, i. 310, ii. 358; letter laid before the Assembly of Pennsylvania, i. 165; letter from Wolfe concerning Quebec, ii. 271, 272; visited by Walpole, ii. 358; supplanted by the Earl of Bute, ii. 393.
- Holdernes, Lady Emily, ii. 358.
- Holland, Lieutenant, his report of Duquesne's war-party, i. 88, 89.
- Holland, ii. 286; her rank in maritime enterprise, ii. 411.
- Holmes, Admiral, sails for New York, ii. 192; his squadron, ii. 263, 273; attacked by the French, ii. 264; the ships carefully watched by the French, ii. 274-276; his fleet prepares for service, ii. 278-282; feint to deceive Bougainville, ii. 279, 280; the final attack on Quebec, ii. 281.
- Hopkins, Lieutenant, the attack on Louisbourg, ii. 59-61.
- Hopson, Governor of Acadia, i. 104, 112, 113, 257; succeeded by Lawrence, i. 113.
- Horseflesh eaten at Montreal, ii. 10.
- Hospital battery, the, ii. 208.
- "Hot Stuff," ii. 234 note.
- Hôtel-Dieu, ii. 265; its condition after the siege, ii. 328; care of the sick, ii. 331.
- Houllière, commander of French regulars, ii. 71.
- House of Burgesses, the, i. 137, 138.
- House of Commons, the, ii. 41, 410, influence of the Duke of Newcastle in, i. 179; debate concerning the peace between France and England, ii. 406, 407.
- Howard the philanthropist, i. 7.
- Howe, Captain, ii. 127; the encounter with Hocquart, i. 185, 186.
- Howe, Captain, the Heights of Abraham scaled by his men, ii. 282, 283, 290.
- Howe, Brigadier-Lord, ii. 48; effort made to assist the settlement at German Flats, ii. 7; united with Abercromby in command, ii. 48; the expedition against Ticonderoga, ii. 89-97; his leadership, ii. 89, 90; reforms introduced into the army by, ii. 90; his characteristics, ii. 90, 91; tablet erected to, in Westminster Abbey, ii. 91; passage of the expedition across Lake George, ii. 92-94; reconnoitres the landing, ii. 94; the meeting of the forces in the woods, ii. 96; effect of his death on the army, ii. 97, 103.
- Howe, Captain Edward, an English officer, i. 118; treacherously murdered, i. 118, 119.
- Hubbard, Thomas, ii. 429.
- Hubertsburg, the treaty of, ii. 407.
- Hudson Bay, English possessions near, i. 20.
- Hudson River, the, i. 28, 32, 193, 289, 319, 321, 384, 387, 391, 452, ii. 2, 116, 119, 165; Dutch proprietors on the, i. 32, 33; parties sent to explore, ii. 241.
- Huguenots, the, persecution of, i. 14, 21, 22; the language of, spoken in New York, i. 32.
- Hugues, plan of defence proposed by, ii. 99, 100.
- Hungary, appeal made to the nobles of, by Maria Theresa, i. 19; action of the nobles, i. 19.

Hungary, the Queen of, ii. 389.
 "Hunter," the, ii. 286.
 Huron, Lake, i. 57, 75, 486.
 Hurons, the, i. 125, 154, 209; their Christianity, i. 41; assist the French, i. 371, ii. 142; called to a council by Montcalm, i. 485-489; their savagery, ii. 145 note.
 Huske, map of North America, i. 126 note.
 Hutchins, Ensign, ii. 250, 272.
 Hutchinson, Indian cruelties, ii. 5 note.

I.

Illinois, i. 125, 486, ii. 142; French claims in, i. 40, 41; two maps of, i. 41.
 Illinois Indians, home of, i. 40.
 Illinois River, the, i. 56, 83, ii. 155, 244; French interests, ii. 248, 249.
 "Illustre," the, i. 362.
 Independents, the, i. 32.
 India, i. 4, ii. 396; results of the Seven Years War, i. 4; the mastery of, i. 10; French colonies in, i. 356; the power of Pitt, ii. 43, 44; losses to be sustained by France, ii. 406, 410.
 Indians, the, i. 93, ii. 86; influenced by the French to fight the English, i. 28, 37, 47, 48, 84, 99-108, 110, 111, 115, 119, 152, 161, 171, 175, 184, 211-213, 236, 238, 239-241, 325, 371, 372, 392, 434, 467, 475, 476, 478, 479, 486, ii. 142, 144, 145, 381; population in the Ohio Valley, i. 40, 50, 60, 130, 139; allies of the English, i. 42, 392, ii. 139, 140, 143, 147, 148, 150, 151, 162, 372; visited by Bienville, i. 44, 45; hostile encounter with Bienville, i. 48, 49; village of, on Loramie Creek, i. 51; importance of Pique Town, i. 52; matters pertaining to trade and missions, i. 54, 62-71, 485, 487, ii. 27, 144, 145; councils held with Gist by Old Britain and his followers, i. 56, 57; invite the English to a feather dance, i. 58; power of Sir William Johnson over, i. 64, 172-175, 194, 195, 287, 295, 390-392; at Oswego, i. 72; their treachery, i. 80; rumors of plots among, i. 82-84; attacked at Pickawillany, i. 84, 85; cannibalism among, i. 85, 478, 480, 483, 484; relations with the Acadians, i. 96, 97-108, 264, ii. 420, 421; plans of the French in Duquesne's expedition, thwarted, i. 130, 131; parleys, held with Washington, i. 133; assist Washington, i. 145, 146, 151; account of the conduct of Washington's band, i. 149, 150; at Great Meadows, i. 151; under Coulon de Villiers, i. 153, 155; harangued by Contrecoeur, i. 154; tribes at Fort Duquesne, i. 154; sent out as scouts by the French, i. 156; attack Washington, i. 156, 157-161; attitude of the British cabinet towards, i. 171; complaints of the Mohawks, i. 172; forces under Sir William Johnson, i. 301, ii. 104, 369; commissioners at Albany, i. 172; their opinions of the French, i. 173, 174; meeting at Albany for conference, i. 173-176; estimate of, held by Braddock, i. 188; Johnson made sole superintendent of the Northern Tribes, i. 195, 390; join Braddock's expedition, i. 203, 204; try to interrupt General Braddock's march, i. 205, 206; tribes at Fort Duquesne, i. 208, 209; cruelties practised by, on prisoners and others, i. 209, 210, 221-222, 330; cruelties of, i. 331, 339, 342, 343, 347, 373, 380, 422, 423, 482, 483, 505-513, 514 note, ii. 4, 5, 14, 171, 218, 124-126, 222, 223, 232, 248, 258, 262, 333-336, 351, 352, 370, 373, 374, 428-431; depart from Fort Duquesne to fight the English, i. 211-213; their mode of warfare, i. 215-219, ii. 134, 135; the encounter with Braddock, i. 215-227, ii. 381; the battle at Beau-séjour, i. 248; attack the English at Peticodiac, i. 275, 276; speeches made by, i. 288; sent as scouts to Canada, i. 293; under Dieskau, i. 296, 299; demands made by, i. 297; the battle of Lake George, i. 303-317; the fur-trade, i. 320; under Governor Shirley, i. 325, 326; efforts of the French to prevent the prisoners being tortured, i. 330; feelings of the Quakers towards, i. 337, 339, 344; petition sent to the Assembly of Pennsylvania, i. 347; policy of Franklin, i. 349; described by Montcalm, i. 372, 373, 456, 463-465; relations of Montcalm with, i. 372, 373, 379, 463-465, 474-476; join the expedition of Léry, i. 374, 375; bring to the French rumors of the attack upon Ticonderoga, i. 377; their ways described by Duchat, i. 379, 380; trouble the English in their transportation of stores, i. 388; sent to harass Oswego, i. 393, 394;

join the French at Montreal, i. 407; capture of Oswego, i. 408-420; the attack upon Kittanning, i. 423-427; assist the English at Fort William Henry, i. 428; join the war-party of Perière, i. 429-431; sent to Ticonderoga, i. 437, 438, 442; fight with Rogers' rangers, i. 443, ii. 122-124, 445; join Vaudreuil's war-parties, i. 447, 448; exaggerated accounts of Vaudreuil in relation to, i. 461, 462; ceremony of the war-song, i. 476; fortified camps of, i. 477; described by Bougainville, i. 478, 479; their ornaments and dress, i. 478, 480; their Manitou, i. 479; their rations, i. 479; their religion, i. 479; their war-feast described, i. 480-482; capture of Colonel Parker's company, i. 484; scalping-party at Fort Edward, i. 485; a council called by Montcalm, i. 485-489; French officers having command of, i. 486; speeches made by the chiefs, i. 487; their interpreters, i. 487; the attack and massacre at Fort William Henry, i. 490-513, 514 note, ii. 428-431; encounter on Lake George, i. 492, 493; death and burial of a chief, i. 493, 494; interview with Montcalm, i. 499-501; prisoners bought from, ii. 6; the fight at German Flats, ii. 6, 7; brutal murder of Lieutenant Phillips, ii. 14; sent to guard Louisbourg, ii. 56; serve under Marin, ii. 122; carry off Major Putnam, ii. 123; Bradstreet forbids cruelty, ii. 128, 129; effect of the French victory at Ticonderoga, ii. 128; serve under Forbes, ii. 139, 140, 142; convention of, ii. 142, 143, 147-150, 161; influence and visit of Post the Moravian, ii. 144-150; effect of the victory at Fort Duquesne, ii. 162; sent to Montcalm, ii. 165, 166; Vaudreuil's admiration for, ii. 171; number ready to defend Canada, ii. 178; resolutions of Vaudreuil, ii. 180; assist in the defence of Quebec, ii. 201, 202, 215, 218, 294, 312-314; complaints of British soldiers, ii. 221; encounter with Carleton, ii. 225; the siege of Niagara, ii. 243-249; expedition of Rogers against the village of St. Francis, ii. 253-258; expedition of Lévis against Quebec, ii. 341-358; the attack on Montreal, ii. 367, 371.

Indian corn, i. 208, 335.

Innes, Colonel James, i. 162, 227, 228, 470; commander at Fort Cumberland, i. 226; plans of Dinwiddie, i. 332.

Inverawe, ii. 93, 109; castle of, ii. 433; legend of, ii. 433-436.

Inverness, ii. 185.

Iowas, the, their language, i. 478; called to a council by Montcalm, i. 486-489.

Ipswich, ii. 115.

Ireland, ii. 401; the regiments arrive at Hampton, i. 191.

Irish, the, in Pennsylvania, i. 31, 54, 339, 446, 447.

Iroquois Indians, the. See Five Nations.

Iroquois mission, the, i. 64, 65.

Irwin, Lieutenant, serves with Rogers, ii. 122.

Island Battery, the, ii. 55, 62, 63.

Italy, the Family Compact, ii. 396.

J.

Jack, Captain, story of, i. 204.

Jacobites, the, i. 5, 193.

Jacobs, Captain, Indian chief, i. 423; the reduction of Kittanning, i. 423-427.

Jacques-Cartier, ii. 275, 304, 305, 308, 312, 318, 341, 361, 363.

James II., plan for uniting the northern colonies in America, i. 34.

James River i. 422 note.

Jefferson, i. 163.

Jersey, Island of, i. 252.

"Jersey Blues," the, i. 320, 382.

Jervis, John, with Wolfe in the "Sutherland," ii. 284.

Jesuits, the, i. 64, ii. 144, 208; settlements of, ii. 144.

Joannès, his efforts to save Quebec, ii. 315, 316.

Johnson, Sergeant John, loyalty of the British soldiers, ii. 281, 339, 352, 353; fight of Murray with, ii. 349, 443; the assault on Quebec made by Lévis, ii. 352-359; his writings on Quebec, ii. 440.

Johnson, Sir William, i. 62 note, 319, 325, ii. 104; his influence over the Indians, i. 64, 172, 174, 194, 287, 288, 390-393, ii. 142, 143, 244; Indian treachery, i. 89; appointed leader of the expedition against Crown Point, i. 194, 196, 286, 288; made Indian commissioner, i. 195, 288, 390; his birth and characteristics, i. 286, 287, 294; his troops, i. 286-290, 294, 295, 301, 301 note, 310, 384; encamps near Albany, i. 289; the expedition marches on to Lake George, i. 294,

- 295; gives the name to Lake George, i. 295; ambush prepared for, by Dieskau, i. 296, 300; sends a letter of warning to Colonel Blanchard, i. 296; movements of Dieskau, i. 296-300; forces sent in advance repelled by Dieskau, i. 301-305; the battle of Lake George, i. 304-317, ii. 88; wounded, i. 306, 308; Dieskau brought into camp, and kindly treated, i. 308, 309; the English and French losses, i. 312 note; his camp at Lake George, i. 313, 314; fails to capture Crown Point, i. 313-316, 382; a council of war held, i. 314; urged to attack Ticonderoga, i. 314; raised to the rank of baron, i. 316, 390; eulogies of, i. 316; cause of the quarrel with Shirley, i. 327; his letter to the Lords of Trade, i. 327; the loss of Fort Bull, i. 375; difficulties thrown in his path, i. 392, 393; joins Webb at Fort Edward, ii. 2; money expended by Massachusetts on his expedition, ii. 84, 85; Indian convention at Easton, ii. 147, 148; takes command in Prideaux's place, ii. 245; Pouchot's allies cut to pieces, ii. 246, 247; his fight at Niagara, ii. 247, 248; restrains the Indians from cruelty, ii. 248, 370, 374; superseded by Gage, ii. 249; the army embarks for Montreal, ii. 369.
- Johnson, Fort, i. 288, 321, 391, 415, 416.
- Johnstone, ii. 81 note, 102; aide-de-camp to Lévis, ii. 217; description of the attack on the French camp, ii. 232; despatched to assemble the troops, ii. 291; fired upon by the British, ii. 301, 302; the general disorder of the troops at Quebec, ii. 302, 303; the death of Montcalm, ii. 303, 304, 309, 310, 441, 442; his opinion of the French retreat, ii. 307; his opportunities for observation, ii. 440; his "Dialogue in Hades," ii. 440.
- Joncaire-Chabert, i. 392, ii. 244; able to converse in the Indian dialects, i. 44; discovers an intended Indian attack, i. 46, 47; sent as a messenger by Céloron, i. 48, 49; meets with hostile treatment, i. 49, 50; his influence over the Indians, i. 59, 63, 64, 171, ii. 143, 144; anti-English speeches made to the Ohio Indians, i. 59 note; leaden plate stolen from, i. 62 note; at Niagara, i. 70; assists Father Piquet, i. 70, 71, 75; report concerning the Ohio Indians, i. 83; in command at Venango, i. 133; invites Washington to supper, i. 133, 134.
- Joncaire-Clauzonne, ii. 244.
- Jonquière, Marquis de la, governor of Canada, i. 77, 117; illegal trade of Tournois stopped, i. 65 note; his character and description of, i. 77, 78, 81; his instructions with regard to injuring the English, i. 78-81; his unhappiness, sickness, and death, i. 81, 81 note, 82; orders given to Céloron, i. 84; report of, concerning the Acadians, i. 95, 103, 104; a despatch sent to the colonial minister, i. 98, 99; assists the Indians to harass the English, i. 100, 103, 104; his efforts to regain the Acadians for French subjects, i. 103, 104; issues a proclamation, i. 120.
- Joseph, i. 361; his voyage, i. 364.
- Jumonville, Coulon de, i. 147; matters pertaining to the alleged assassination, i. 147, 148-150, 153, 158. ii. 421-423; his summons and instructions, i. 148, 148 note, 149; his widow receives a pension, i. 151 note.
- Jumonville, Charlotte, i. 151 note.
- Juniata River, the, i. 204, 423.

K.

- Kalm, ii. 404; his prediction concerning the British colonies in America, ii. 404.
- Kanaouagon, the, i. 43.
- Kanon, ii. 197, 198, 326 note; his fleet, ii. 201.
- Karl, Prince, ii. 40.
- Kaskaskia, French settlement at, i. 41.
- Kaunitz, i. 354.
- Kenawha River, the, i. 48, 58.
- Kennebec River, the, i. 28, 184, 192, 245, ii. 250; forts to be built upon, by the English, i. 169.
- Kennedy, Lieutenant, consults with Captain Murray, i. 271, 272; his exploits against the French, i. 428; adventures of a scouting-party of Rogers, i. 441-445; killed by the French, i. 443.
- Kennedy, Captain, sent to the Abenakis of St. Francis, ii. 251.
- Kennington Cove, ii. 59 note.
- Keppel, Commodore, his arrival at Hampton, i. 187; accompanies Braddock to Alexandria, i. 191; sailors furnished by, for Braddock, i. 201.
- Kikensick, chief of the Nipissings, speech of, i. 487, 488.
- Kilgore, Ralph, i. 79 note.

Killick, master of an English transport, ii. 205; passage of the Traverse, ii. 204-206.

King's Bastion, the, ii. 53, 55; the Governor's dwelling, ii. 67-69.

Kingston, i. 68.

Kirkland, Dr., a surgeon, i. 394, 395.

Kittanning, i. 24, 423; attack upon, i. 423-427.

Kloster-Zeven, convention of, ii. 45.

Knox, Captain John, ii. 56 note; character of Le Loutre described, i. 252 note; at Annapolis, ii. 77; rejoicing at the fall of Louisbourg, ii. 77, 78; his regiment ordered to Louisbourg, ii. 181, 182; his impressions of Wolfe, ii. 184; account of the Canadian coasts, ii. 205; description of the scenery on the St. Lawrence River, ii. 207; visits the Church of Saint-Laurent, ii. 207, 208; description of the fireships, ii. 211, 212, 227; his view of Quebec from Point Lévi, ii. 214; visits the falls, ii. 220; reports obtained from a Canadian, ii. 222, 223; his account of Canadian prisoners, ii. 226; losses reported, ii. 233; the illness of Wolfe, ii. 266, 267; the defence of Cap-Rouge, ii. 279; the dying words of Wolfe, ii. 297 note; describes Quebec after the siege, ii. 329, 330; his stay in the General Hospital, ii. 330, 331; the troops described by, ii. 333, 334; skirmish at Lorette, ii. 337, 338; action between Lévis and Murray, ii. 347-350; arrival of aid, ii. 355, 356; the troops of Murray sail for Montreal, ii. 363-366; death of Montcalm, ii. 441.

Kolin, ii. 39.

Kunersdorf, the allies attacked, ii. 387.

Kushkushkee, ii. 145.

L.

La Barolon, i. 458.

La Chine, i. 38, 458, ii. 6, 9, 371, 372.

La Clue, Admiral, ii. 49; imprisoned by Osborn, ii. 49, 50.

La Corne, Saint-Luc de, i. 486, 503, ii. 121, 431; sent to Acadia to watch the frontier, i. 103, 116, 117; circumstances attending the massacre at Fort William Henry, i. 498, 507, 509; ordered to Quebec, ii. 195, 198, 242; to defend the rapids, ii. 361, 371; shipwrecked, ii. 384, 385.

La Demoiselle (Old Britain), an Indian chief, i. 51, 83; his course of action with Céloron, i. 51, 52; his village, i. 56; councils held with Gist, i. 56, 57; the English invited to a feather dance, i. 57, 58; devoured by the Indians, i. 84, 85.

La Galette, ii. 369.

Lainé, ii. 28.

Lalerne, fight at Beaubassin, i. 117.

"La Liberté," ship, i. 457.

La Motte, Dubois de, French admiral, i. 469, 471-473 note; commands the French fleet for America, i. 182, 183; effort of Boscawen to intercept his fleet, i. 185; the English fleet wrecked, i. 471, 472.

La Motte, Captain, ii. 302.

"La Mutine," frigate, i. 102.

Lauder, Sir Thomas Dick, ii. 433.

Langlade, Charles, a French trader, i. 62, 84, ii. 218, 372 note, 425; to receive a pension, i. 85; the Ojibwas led to attack the Miamis, i. 209; his Indian wife, i. 486; matters in relation to Braddock's defeat, ii. 425, 426.

Languedoc, i. 456; battalion of, i. 182, 186, 298, 379, 477; stationed at Ticonderoga, i. 376, ii. 104; the advance upon Fort William Henry, i. 491; the fall of Quebec, ii. 292.

Langy, rangers captured by, ii. 87; reports the approach of the English, ii. 87, 88; meeting with the English in the woods, ii. 94-97; detachment of, ii. 110.

La Paille Coupée, village of, i. 43.

La Panse, M. de, ii. 373.

La Perade, Chevalier de, i. 210.

La Plante, i. 486.

La Prairie, i. 457.

La Présentation, i. 70, 154, 372, 485, ii. 369; description of, i. 65-67; effort of Piquet to gain converts, i. 70, 71, 74, 75; Jesuit influence, ii. 144.

La Reine, battalion of, i. 182, 186, 298, 477, ii. 104; to defend Ticonderoga, i. 376; the advance upon Fort William Henry, i. 491.

La Sarre, battalion of, i. 363, 408, 477; encamped at Fort Frontenac, i. 376; advances upon Fort William Henry, i. 491; serves under Montcalm, ii. 104; the fall of Quebec, ii. 292.

Lascelles' regiment, ii. 233 note.

La Suède, ii. 342.

"La Superbe," ship, i. 457.

Laurel Hill, i. 145, 146, 151, 155, ii. 141.

Lawrence, Brigadier, Governor of Nova Scotia, i. 239, ii. 48, 194 note; succeeds Hopson in office, i. 113; his treatment of the Acadians, i.

- 113; the occupation of Beaubassin, i. 115-120; the attack on Beauséjour, i. 192, 239, 240, 245; his characteristics, i. 257; quoted concerning the Acadians, i. 257, 263, 264, 269, 270, 282; exacts the oath of allegiance from the Acadians, i. 260; a memorial sent to, from the Acadians, i. 260-263; matters pertaining to the expulsion of the Acadians, i. 263-267, 273, 274, 282; serves in the expedition against Louisbourg, ii. 48, 57.
- Lawrence, Fort, erected, i. 118, 239, 241, 243; demands of Le Loutre, i. 121; encampment of the English, i. 248.
- Le Bâtard, Étienne, the murder of Captain Howe, i. 118, 119.
- Le Boëuf, Fort, i. 130, 213, ii. 160, 244; erection of, i. 128; garrison at, i. 131; arrival of Washington, i. 133, 134, 297; burned, ii. 247.
- Le Borgne, ii. 28, 425.
- Le Brun, i. 11.
- Le Calvaire, ii. 336.
- Legge, chancellor of the exchequer, ii. 393.
- Le Guerne, a priest, i. 281; his description of the embarkation of the Acadians, i. 281.
- Le Loutre, Joseph Louis, vicar-general of Acadia, i. 99, 104, 113; instigates the Indians to murder the English, i. 99, 100, 103-105, 235; injures the Acadians by his machinations, i. 101, 113, 114, 122, 238, 243; letter of, concerning Halifax, i. 101; pension received by, i. 105; his dealings discovered by Cornwallis, i. 107; encourages the Acadians to leave their farms, i. 108, 109, 110, 120, 243, 244, 250, 255, 260; his double-dealing and cruelty, i. 114, 243, 252 note, ii. 421; arrival of, at Beaubassin, i. 116; treacherous murder of Captain Howe, i. 118, 119; his letter in answer to Lawrence's proclamation, i. 121; letters from officials, urging dishonest conduct, i. 239, 242; relations with Vergor, i. 242-244; siege and capitulation of Beauséjour, i. 244-253; imprisoned by the English, i. 252; departs for France, i. 252.
- Le Marchant, Sir Denis, ii. 295 note.
- Le Mercier, Chevalier, i. 157, 158, 461, ii. 20, 87; plans of, to attack the English, i. 153-155; serves as messenger between the French and English, i. 449; his fraudulent contracts, ii. 35, 36, 385.
- Lenisse, Madame de, i. 458.
- "Léopard," the ship, i. 362.
- Lepaon, i. 12.
- "Le Prudent," ii. 54 note.
- Léry, a French officer, i. 374, 375; his plan of Detroit, i. 76 note.
- Leslie, Lieutenant, i. 219 note.
- Les Mines, i. 108.
- Leuthen, ii. 40.
- Le Verrier, in command at Michillimackinac, ii. 31.
- Levi, Point, ii. 213-216, 220, 222, 224, 229, 274, 277, 281; position of Wolfe's army, ii. 219, 228, 230-233; held by the English at, ii. 263, 270; embarkation of the artillery, ii. 274, 275, 280.
- Lévis, Chevalier de, i. 150, 360, 482, ii. 360; opinion of, in regard to the killing of Jumonville, i. 150; beloved by Montcalm, i. 363, 378, 379, 455, ii. 308; embarks for America, i. 363, 364; joins Montcalm, i. 373; at Montreal, i. 376; his command at Ticonderoga, i. 377-379, 407; his description of Montcalm, i. 379; his manner of life at Montreal, i. 455, 457, ii. 29, 426-428; treatment received from Vaudreuil, i. 463, 464, ii. 10, 312, 375; his characteristics and popularity, i. 466, 478, ii. 312, 353, 361; encampment of, i. 477; matters pertaining to the attack at Fort William Henry, i. 485, 490-499, 510, 512, 514 note; his account of the slaughter at German Flats, ii. 7 note; quiets the mutiny at Montreal, ii. 10; statements concerning the fight at Rogers Rock, ii. 16 note; the victory at Ticonderoga, ii. 86-89, 103-113, 431-436; his promotion, ii. 174; the siege and fall of Quebec, ii. 216-233, 250-325; attacked by Wolfe, ii. 230-233; sent to protect Montreal, ii. 250, 251, 265; assumes the command after Montcalm's death, ii. 308, 312, 313, 318, 335; letter to Bourlamaque, ii. 314; his scaling-ladders, ii. 338, 356, 357; his expedition to attack Quebec, ii. 341-358; the encounter at Ste-Foy, ii. 342-347, 442-444; the courtesies of war, ii. 354; the fall of Canada, ii. 360-382; the terms of capitulation for Montreal, ii. 372-374; tries to preserve the honor of France, ii. 373, 375; escapes from shipwreck, ii. 384; his letters, ii. 438.
- Lévis, Fort, ii. 369, 374; attacked by Amherst, ii. 369, 370.

Lewis, Major, ii. 139: the expedition of Major Grant, ii. 151-155.
 "Licorne," the ship, i. 363.
 Liegnitz, successes of Frederic, ii. 388.
 Lighthouse Point, ii. 53, 62.
 Ligneris, Captain, ii. 244, 245; at Fort Duquesne, i. 208; encounter with the English under Braddock, i. 216; orders concerning prisoners, i. 330 note; attack expected from Forbes, ii. 141; danger of starvation at the fort, ii. 155, 156; Fort Duquesne abandoned, ii. 159; at Venango, ii. 161; letter of Montcalm concerning, ii. 169; departs from Presquise, ii. 245; taken prisoner, ii. 248; matters pertaining to a pension for, ii. 423, 424; receives the cross of the Order of St. Louis, ii. 426.
 Ligonier, General, i. 178.
 Ligonier Bay, ii. 251.
 "Lis," the, fate of, i. 185.
 L'Isle-Dieu, Abbé de, i. 106; assertion concerning Jumonville, i. 151 note.
 Lismahago, i. 159.
 Little Meadows, arrival of Braddock's army at, i. 206.
 Little Niagara, Fort, ii. 243, 244.
 Livingston, William, i. 419; manor of, i. 32.
 Logstown, i. 46, 47, 53, 60, 133.
 "London Chronicle," the article upon provincial soldiery, ii. 118.
 Long Saut, the, ii. 370.
 Longueil, Baron de, Governor of Canada, i. 82, 103, 486, ii. 86, 258 note; complaints of English traders, i. 83, 84; correspondence with Girard, i. 106, 107; paper drawn up by, i. 154, 155; seeks to secure Indian allies, i. 475, 476.
 Loppinot, sent from Louisbourg for terms of capitulation, ii. 71-74.
 Loramie Creek, the, i. 51.
 Lords of Trade, the, instructions to the colonial Assemblies, i. 172, 173; leadership of Lord Halifax, i. 179; quoted concerning the Acadians and their want of loyalty, i. 257, 258; complaints of Johnson, i. 327.
 Lorette, i. 209, 371, 485, ii. 284, 293, 307, 342, 357; mission of, ii. 145 note; English outpost at, ii. 335; skirmish at, ii. 337.
 Lorimier, i. 486.
 Loring, Captain, the navy built by order of Amherst, ii. 241, 242, 251, 252.
 Lotbinière, a Canadian engineer, i. 374, ii. 87; his work at Ticonderoga, i. 378.
 Loudon, Earl, to be the commander-in-chief of the American troops, i. 383; difficulties in providing for the soldiers, i. 387, 439, 440; arrives at Albany, i. 399; royal orders concerning military rank, i. 399, 400; the provincial forces examined, i. 401; sends reinforcements to Oswego, i. 405; orders Winslow to abandon Ticonderoga expedition, i. 406; his charges against Shirley, i. 413 note, 420; English losses, i. 419, 420; his campaign, i. 421, 422; his orders to Winslow, i. 438; exaggeration of Vaudreuil, i. 460, 461; his plans for reducing Louisbourg, i. 468-471, 473 note, 496, ii. 131; soldiers drawn from New York, i. 474, 475; frontier exposed to attack, i. 496; letters sent from Webb, i. 498 note, 501; despatches sent to Webb, ii. 1; his plan of action, ii. 2; plans an attack upon Ticonderoga, ii. 11; his fail-ures, ii. 45; recalled from his command, ii. 48, 83; money expended by Massachusetts on this expedition, ii. 84; consulted by Bradstreet, ii. 127; his influence on the army, ii. 380; letters concerning the massacre at Fort William Henry, ii. 428, 429.

 Louis XIII., i. 14, 15.
 Louis XIV., i. 284 note, ii. 409.
 Louis XV. i. 43, 66, 67, 70, 71, 75, 129, 361; possibility of the conquest of Canada, i. 2, 3; condition of France during his reign, i. 9-16; scenes at Versailles, i. 11, 12; adornments given to Paris, i. 13, 14; feeling towards, i. 14; position of Madame de Pompadour, i. 15, 179; subjects of, in Acadia, i. 91, 94-96, 102, 105, 235, 238, 260, 284; the English denounced by, i. 115; political alliances with, i. 354; his detestation of Frederic the Great, i. 355; the promotion of Montcalm, i. 360; troops sent against Austria, i. 363; troops sent to reinforce New France, i. 363; instructions sent to Vaudreuil, i. 367, 368; expenses in Canada, i. 370, 372, 453, ii. 17-38, 169-172, 321, 322; sends the cordon rouge to Montcalm, i. 454; his portrait on Indian medals, i. 480; promises of the Indians, i. 488; corruption at court, ii. 44, 45; Vaudreuil's efforts to slander Montcalm, ii. 164-167, 321, 322; the refusal of forces from France to Canada, ii. 174-178; the loss of New France ii. 375, 376.
 Louisbourg, i. 29, 105, 107, 109, 185, 239, 242, 251, 290, 291; fortress of,

- i. 92, 93, 368, ii. 52-55; restored to the French, i. 92; commanders at, i. 101, 102, 104; aid refused to Beauséjour, i. 250; plan of Loudon for the reduction of, i. 468, 469, 471, 474; the English fleet wrecked, i. 472; policy of Pitt regarding, ii. 47, 48, the siege and reduction of, by the English, ii. 48, 49, 51-82 note, 112, 129, 162, 177, 190; inhabitants of the town, ii. 54; the batteries silenced by the enemy, ii. 61, 62; Drucour's efforts to protect the harbor, ii. 64; the shipping burned, ii. 65-67, 69; the Governor's lodgings in flames, ii. 67, 68; position of the besieged, ii. 69, 70; the terms of capitulation finally accepted, ii. 71-74, 75 note; statistics of prisoners, cannon, etc., ii. 75, 76; Governor Drucour succeeded by Governor Whitmore, ii. 76; rejoicing at the fall of, ii. 76-78; Wolfe ordered to scatter the neighboring settlers, ii. 80, 81; arrival of 43d Regiment, ii. 183; departure of the fleet with Gen. Wolfe, ii. 193; dismantled and abandoned, ii. 363.
- Louisbourg Grenadiers, the, at Quebec, ii. 298 note.
- Louisiana, i. 72, 73, 366, ii. 2, 155; French possessions in, i. 20, 24, 39; communication with Canada, i. 36, 37, 39, 40, 80, 83; arrival of the exiles from Acadia, i. 283; proposal of Montcalm concerning, ii. 179; given to Spain, ii. 406.
- Louisville, i. 58.
- Louvigny, i. 458.
- Lowendal, i. 10.
- "Lowestoff," the, ii. 355, 356.
- Lowry, i. 79.
- Lowther, Miss Katherine, ii. 190; Wolfe's last message to, ii. 284.
- Loyalhannon, ii. 149, 151, 154-156.
- Loyalhannon Creek, ii. 141.
- Lusignan, commandant at Ticonderoga, i. 445.
- Lutherans, the, i. 31, 32.
- Lutterberg, battle of, ii. 47.
- Lycurgus, ii. 91.
- Lydius, a trader, i. 435.
- Lyman, Phineas, in the expedition against Crown Point, i. 290, 313, 314; origin of Fort Lyman, i. 294; takes command of Johnson's troops, i. 306; conflicting reports concerning, i. 316; at Fort Edward, i. 401, 402; his chaplain, i. 402; report concerning the camp, i. 403, 404; regiment of, ii. 95; meeting with Langy in the woods, ii. 97.
- Lyman, Fort, i. 295-297, 300, 301, 308-310; building of, i. 294; afterwards called Fort Edward, i. 294, 315.
- Lyon's Cove, i. 268.

M.

- Macartney, Captain, his humanity, ii. 343, 344.
- McBryer, Andrew, i. 85.
- Macdonald, Captain, serves in the expedition of Major Grant, ii. 152; his death, ii. 153.
- MacDonald Captain Donald, sent to attack the French at Le Calvaire, ii. 336; his death, ii. 349.
- McDonough, Thomas, ii. 440.
- McGinnis, Captain, i. 308, 309.
- Machault d'Arnouville, minister of marine and colonies (1754-1757), i. 13, 15, 179, 367, ii. 44.
- Machault, Fort, ii. 159.
- Mackay, Captain, i. 152; at Great Meadows, i. 152, 159, ii. 421-423.
- Mackellar, Patrick, serves as engineer under Braddock and Wolfe, i. 221 note, ii. 208; to strengthen Fort Ontario, i. 420, 420 note.
- Mackenzie, Captain, ii. 152-155.
- Macleane, Allan, ii. 245 note.
- McMullen, Lieutenant, sent to Crown Point, ii. 254.
- Macnamara, Admiral, accompanies La Motte's expedition, i. 182, 183.
- MacVicar, Anne, recollections of Albany, i. 319, 320.
- Madawaska, i. 283.
- Madeira, i. 287.
- Mahon, Lord, i. 179.
- Maillard, missionary at Cape Breton, i. 105, 119.
- Maillebois, i. 10, 359.
- Maine, English possessions in, i. 20, 124.
- Maître Abraham, ii. 289.
- Manach, Father, i. 252; letter of Boishébert to, quoted, i. 265, 266.
- Manila, ii. 401, 402.
- Manitou, the, i. 479, 487, 489.
- Mann, Sir Horace, letters from Horace Walpole quoted, i. 188; ambassador at Florence, ii. 323.
- Mansfield, i. 8.
- Mante, Major Thomas, ii. 82 note, 97; statistics of the force sent against Louisbourg, ii. 56 note.
- Maps of the Illinois colony, i. 41 note; map of Bonnacamp, i. 62 note; of French and British dominion in North America, i. 126 note.
- Maria Theresa, her inheritance from

- Charles VI., i. 18; her heritage taken from her, i. 19, 353, 354; the enemy of Frederic the Great, i. 353; flatters Pompadour, i. 354, 355; the war in Europe, ii. 38-40, 409; condition of France, ii. 393.
- Marietta, i. 48.
- Marigalante Island, restored by England, ii. 405.
- Marin, i. 486, ii. 20, 30, 122, 244; promotion of, i. 88; commander of Duquesne's expedition to the Ohio, i. 129-131, 137; his sickness and death, i. 129-131.
- Marin joins the war-party of Perière, i. 429-431; the slaughter at Fort Edward, i. 485; official knavery, ii. 27; victory over, ii. 122-127; taken prisoner, ii. 248.
- Marin, Madame, ii. 20.
- Marlborough, Duke of, i. 316.
- Marolles, correspondence of, ii. 81 note.
- Martel, the King's storekeeper, ii. 20, 30.
- Martin, Father, evidence in relation to the massacre at Fort William Henry, i. 514 note.
- Martin, Abraham. See Abraham.
- Martin, Sergeant Joshua, one of Rogers' rangers, i. 444.
- Martinique, ii. 401, 405.
- Maryland, i. 332, ii. 132; government and characteristics of, i. 25, 33; aid asked from, by Dinwiddie, i. 139; aids Virginia, i. 168; commissioners sent to Albany for an Indian congress, i. 173-176; council of governors held with Braddock, i. 191-196; sufferings caused by Indian warfare, i. 329, 330, 422.
- Massachusetts, i. 168, 260, 315, 480, ii. 93; religion, finance, and politics of, i. 25-29, ii. 84, 85 (see Assembly of Massachusetts); commissioners sent to meet the Indians at Albany, i. 61; council of governors held with Braddock, i. 191-195; characteristics of the officers from, i. 272, 273; distribution of the exiled Acadians, i. 282; the Crown Point expedition fitted out, i. 285, 286, 291, 292, 313, 314; money received from Parliament, i. 382 note, ii. 85; method of raising and paying troops, i. 384-387, ii. 84, 85; tablet erected to Lord Howe, in Westminster Abbey, ii. 91; utterances from the pulpits after the fall of Canada, ii. 377-379.
- Massachusetts Historical Society, the, i. 316 note; portrait of Captain Winslow in, i. 273 note.
- Massey, Colonel, ii. 247.
- Mathevet missionary for the Nipisings, i. 487.
- Maumee River, the, i. 40, 51, 52, 82, 84.
- Maurault, Abbé, ii. 255 note.
- Maurepas, Comte de, i. 259 note.
- Maurin, François, ii. 20; official knavery, ii. 22-24, 30; thrown into the Bastille, ii. 385.
- Mauritius, Island of, i. 10.
- Maxen, ii. 388.
- Maxwell, Thomas, ii. 258 note.
- Mayhew, Jonathan, his prediction for the American colonies, ii. 325.
- Maynard, Captain, ii. 123 note.
- Mazade, Madame, i. 361.
- Mediterranean Sea, the, ii. 49.
- Meech, Lieutenant, his encounter with the enemy, ii. 207.
- Mellen, Reverend John, pastor of the Second Church in Lancaster, ii. 377; his sermon on the fall of Canada, ii. 378.
- Memramcook, i. 120, 122.
- Memphremagog, Lake, ii. 254, 256.
- Menomonies, the, i. 407; called to council by Montcalm, i. 486-489.
- Mercer, Colonel, commandant at Oswego, i. 397, 410; his death, i. 412, 413.
- Mercer, Lieutenant-Colonel, to hold the new Fort Duquesne, ii. 160.
- "Mermaid," the, i. 247.
- Messalina, i. 353.
- Mexico, i. 20.
- Mexico, Gulf of, i. 40, 205.
- Miami confederacy, the, i. 40, 52.
- Miami Indians, the, i. 51, 79, 83, 209; their chief (see La Demoiselle), home of, i. 40, 51, 52, 55, 56, 58, 84; visited by Céloron, i. 51, 52; visited by Gist, i. 55-58; their feeling towards the English, i. 59, 130; attacked and killed at Pickawillany, i. 84, 85, 130; called to a council by Montcalm, i. 486-489; become allies of the French, i. 130, ii. 142.
- Miami River, the, i. 40, 51, 56, 83.
- Michigan Lake, i. 75, 407, 437, 486.
- Michillimackinac, i. 75, 84, 486, ii. 248, 249.
- Micmacs, the, i. 23, 107, ii. 181, 194; their missionary, i. 113, 121 (see Le Loutre); disposition and characteristics of, i. 113; at Beaubassin, i. 116; murder of Captain Howe, i. 118, 119; chief of, killed, i. 252; called to a council by Montcalm, i. 486-489; under Boishébert, ii. 66.
- Middle Ages, the, i. 17.
- Milbank, Mr., ii. 358.

- Mildmay, questions of boundary, i. 123.
- Miller, Captain, i. 428, ii. 332.
- Mines, district of, i. 235; population of, i. 264; the people summoned to hear the mandate of the King, i. 271, 272. See Acadians.
- Mines, basin of, i. 94, 237, 240, 241, 260, 267-269, 276.
- Mingoes, the, i. 40, 46, 60, 209; attitude towards the English, i. 59, ii. 150, 151; border warfare of, i. 329.
- Minorca, i. 36, ii. 40; garrisons of, i. 9; restored by France, ii. 405.
- Miquelon Island given to France, ii. 405.
- Miramichi, ii. 25, 80.
- Mirepoix, French ambassador at London, i. 180; correspondence of, i. 183.
- Missaguash River, the, i. 116, 118, 120, 235, 241, 248, ii. 181.
- Mission Indians, the illegal traffic carried on by the French, by means of, i. 65; allies of the French, i. 371, 372, 475, 479, 480, ii. 12; their ferocity, ii. 144, 145.
- Missionaries, their work among the Indians, i. 25, 64, 65, 75, 243-245, 429, ii. 412; intrigues with regard to the Indians, Acadians, and English, i. 99, 100, 102, 103, 243-245, ii. 420, 421.
- Missisqui, i. 485.
- Missisquoi Bay, ii. 254.
- Mississagas, the, i. 70, 486.
- Mississippi, the, i. 20, 24, 40, 42, 124, 125, 130, 170, 335, 372, ii. 179, 405, 406.
- Mitchell, his map of the British and French Dominions, i. 126 note.
- Moccasins, i. 259.
- Mohawk River, the, i. 28, 32, 62 note, 64, 80, 287, 319, 321, 374, 375, 393, 406, ii. 6, 86, 116, 128, 240.
- Mohawks, the, i. 28, 65, 73, 88, 287, 296, 321, 327, 467, ii. 2, 417; complaints of the tribe, i. 171, 172; join Johnson's expedition, i. 289, 295-310; their chief, i. 301, 303, 309; their bravery and ferocity, i. 303, 309, 310; council held with Johnson, i. 391, 392.
- Mohegans, the, i. 391, ii. 256; council held with Johnson, i. 392; ally themselves with the English, ii. 148.
- Mollnitz, battle of, i. 19.
- Monckton, Robert, i. 246; appointed leader of the expedition against Acadia, i. 194, 196; the capture of Beauséjour, i. 196, 239, 248, 254, 260, ii. 193; the Acadians removed from their homes, i. 254, 266-284 (see Acadians); despatched to the Bay of Fundy, ii. 78; serves under Wolfe, at the siege of Quebec, ii. 193, 213, 226, 231-233, 266, 267, 274, 290, 295, 295 note, 298 note, 309, 438; disabled by his wounds, ii. 309, 317; joins Rodney, ii. 401. "Monmouth," the, ii. 49, 50.
- Monongahela River, the, i. 136, 144, 145, 155, 207, 208, ii. 138, 152, 159, 160.
- Monongahela River, the battle of the, i. 210-213, 221, 221 note, 223, 223 note, 328.
- Monro, Lieutenant-Colonel, commandant at Fort William Henry, i. 495, 496; his danger, i. 496-498; his correspondence with Webb concerning aid, i. 497, 502, 503; his correspondence with Montcalm, i. 493, 499; his brave resistance, i. 502-505, ii. 88; the garrison capitulates, i. 505-507; the massacre, i. 505, 507-513, 513 note, 514 note, ii. 428-431.
- Montagu, George, letter from Walpole, ii. 390, 391.
- Montcalm, father of Louis, the Marquis, i. 357; death of, i. 358.
- Montcalm, brother of Louis, his prodigious knowledge and early death, i. 358.
- Montcalm, Chevalier de, son of the Marquis, appointed to command a regiment in France, i. 360; his marriage, ii. 176.
- Montcalm, Marquis de (1884), i. 366 note.
- Montcalm-Gozon de Saint-Véran, Louis Joseph, Marquis de, i. 150, 356, 439; his aides-de-camp, i. 282, 363; succeeds Dieskau in command, i. 356; birth, education, and traits of character, i. 356-358, 366, 367, 413, 414, 465, 466, 483, 489, ii. 167, 318-322; the letter from D'Argenson, i. 360; his wife and family, i. 359, ii. 317; his military service, i. 358-360; his letters to his mother quoted, i. 360-362, 372, 373, 453-457, 464, ii. 112 note, 113 note, 164, 174, 176, 275, 426-428; his salary, i. 361; letters to his wife quoted, i. 362, 364-366, 453-456, 474, ii. 111, 179; embarks for America, i. 362-365; his relations with Bougainville, i. 363; his opinion of Lévis, i. 363, 378, 379, 455, ii. 308; his arrival in Canada, i. 365, 366; his relations with Vaudreuil, i. 366-368, 377, 460, 462-466, ii. 3, 4, 8-10, 164-

- 175, 179, 180, 197, 202, 203, 293, 301, 317-323; his relations with his troops, i. 368, 369, 421, 464, 465, 502, ii. 121, 208, 209, 228, 260, 281; his relations with the Indians, i. 372, 373, 379, 456, 463-465, 474-476, 487, 488, 499-501; life at Montreal and Quebec, i. 376, 407, 453, 455-459, ii. 7, 8; letters to the minister of war, i. 377, 463-465; hastens to the defence of Ticonderoga, i. 378; his victory at Oswego, i. 405-416, 419, 420, 460-465, 467, 475, ii. 127, 292, 320; his situation at Ticonderoga, i. 421, 422; his descriptions of men and things, i. 453-456; receives the cordon rouge, i. 454; letters to Bourlamaque quoted, i. 454, 455, 457-459, 466, ii. 7-9, 167-169, 212, 275; plans a new attack, i. 472; the French troops at Ticonderoga, i. 477, 478; calls a council of Indians, i. 485-489; joined by Lévis, i. 492; prisoners taken on the lake, i. 492, 493; his letter to Monro, i. 498, 499; the attack and conquest of Fort William Henry, i. 499-513, 514 note, ii. 167, 168, 428-431; his position in relation to Fort Edward, ii. 3, 4, 167, 168; retires to Quebec, ii. 7; meeting at Montreal, ii. 10; reveals the frauds in trade, ii. 35, 36, 321, 322; expedition against Ticonderoga, ii. 86-113 note, 238, 240, 431-436; joined by Lévis, ii. 103; the fight with Abercromby, ii. 105-112; letter to Doreil, ii. 111, 112, the cross planted on the battlefield, ii. 112; parties sent to harass Abercromby, i. 121, 122; questions Major Putnam, ii. 126; his camp broken up, ii. 130, 167-169, 175; his condition after the battle of Ticonderoga, ii. 164-169; resolves to stand by Canada, ii. 172, 173; his promotion, ii. 174; the refusal of forces from France, ii. 174-178; marriage of his children, ii. 176; letter from Belleisle, ii. 176, 177; his plans for a final effort for Canada, ii. 178, 179; death of a child of, ii. 179; his arrival at Quebec, ii. 198, 199; the siege and reduction of Quebec by Wolfe, ii. 199-233, 259-325, 325 note, 326 note; his headquarters and camp, ii. 200, 201, 208, 209; his plan of battle and course of action, ii. 209, 210, 218, 219, 222, 224, 228, 260, 262-270; condition of Canadians, ii. 225, 226; Montmorenci evacuated, ii. 273, 274; deceived as to Wolfe's movements, ii. 282-285; the English army ascends the Heights, ii. 286-290; the night before the battle, ii. 290, 291; his last words to the army, and the final attack, ii. 291-300, 346; his wounds, ii. 297, 303, 304; his remarks to the people, ii. 297, 297 note; his death and burial, ii. 305-307, 309, 310, 317, 326 note, 441, 442; his protecting care for the Canadians and French, ii. 309; his last letter to Townshend, ii. 309; papers given to Roubaud, ii. 321, 322, 325, note, 326 note.
- Montcalm, Madame de, mother of the Marquis. See Saint-Véran.
- Montcalm, Madame de, wife of the Marquis, i. 361, ii. 168; her family, i. 358; letters from her husband quoted, i. 362, 454, 474, ii. 111, 112, 426, 427.
- Montcalm, Mademoiselle de, daughter of the Marquis, her marriage, ii. 176.
- Montcalm, Mirète de, ii. 179.
- Montesquieu, i. 16
- Montgomery, Captain Alexander, ii. 261.
- Montgomery, Colonel, his regiment, ii. 132; advance of Forbes's army, ii. 158.
- Montgomery, General Richard, ii. 261.
- Montguet, ii. 302.
- Montguy, ii. 99.
- Montigny, taken prisoner, ii. 248.
- Montmorenci, the heights of, ii. 200, 209; the cataract, ii. 207, 220, 436; position occupied by Wolfe, ii. 216-221; the disaster and evacuation of, ii. 228-233, 259, 268, 269, 273, 274, 381.
- Montour, Andrew, the expedition with Gist, i. 54-59.
- Montour, Catharine, i. 54.
- Montpellier, i. 366, 457.
- Montreal, i. 52, 64, 66, 88, 129, 131, 366, 407, 414, 418, 428, 453, 467, 474, 483, 513, ii. 4-7, 87, 126, 251, 318, 338; social life among the officials, i. 453, 457, 458, ii. 18-22; scarcity of flour, ii. 10; La Frigiponne, ii. 24; census of, ii. 178; call to arms, ii. 195, 198; approach of Amherst, ii. 236, 265, 361-371; Lévis sent to protect, ii. 250; supplies sent to Quebec, ii. 264; Lévis departs for Quebec, ii. 312; preparations to attack Quebec, ii. 340; the fall of Canada, ii. 360-382; the city described, ii. 371, 372; capitulation of, ii. 372, 373, 383, 403; the French soldiers return to France, ii. 374, 383.

- Montreuil, Adjutant-General, i. 376; aids Dieskau, i. 307; his letter concerning Montcalm, quoted, i. 376, 377; delay in sending aid to Montcalm, ii. 301; his letters, ii. 438.
- Moore, Colonel William, letter to Governor Morris, i. 347.
- Moravian brotherhood, the, ii. 144.
- Moravians, the, i. 31, 54, 347; mission of Frederic Post, ii. 144-149.
- Moro Castle, ii. 401, 402.
- Morris, Robert Hunter, Governor of Pennsylvania, i. 167, 228, 233 note, 439, 440, ii. 131, 144; correspondence with the younger Shirley quoted, i. 188, 201, 202, 323, 324, 340, 343; council of governors held with Braddock, i. 191-195; relations of the Penns with, i. 338; question of taxing proprietary lands, i. 337-341, 344-347, 349; his relations with the Assembly, i. 339-350; letter to, from William Moore, i. 347; declares war against the Indians, i. 392; sends Colonel Armstrong to attack Kittanning, i. 423; Indian convention held at Easton, ii. 147, 148.
- Morris, Captain Roger, aide-de-camp to General Braddock, i. 202, 203; wounded in the battle of the Monongahela, i. 219, 229.
- Murdering Town, hamlet of, i. 136.
- Murray Captain Alexander, i. 268; a memorial sent to, from the Acadians, i. 260-263; his relations and correspondence with Colonel Winslow, i. 268-271, 278; the removal of the Acadians, from their homes, i. 269-272, 275, 278-281. See Acadians.
- Murray, James, ii. 351; serves under Wolfe at the reduction of Quebec, ii. 193, 216, 217, 263, 266, 267, 274, 290 (see Quebec); his character, ii. 193, 331, 332, 345, 346; remains in command at Quebec, ii. 317, 331, 332; an attack expected from the French, ii. 335-338; expedition of Lévis against Quebec, ii. 340-358, 442-444; his relations with his soldiers, ii. 351, 352, 365; the courtesies of war, ii. 354; the fall of Canada, ii. 360-382; ascends the St. Lawrence to Montreal, ii. 361-366, 368, 371, 372.
- Muskingum River, the, i. 48, 55.
- N.
- Naples, i. 9.
- Napoleon I., i. 1.
- Narrows, of Lake George, the, i. 430, 434, 441, 491, ii. 92, 93.
- Necessity, Fort, i. 151, 156, ii. 277; retreat of Washington's forces, i. 160, 161; matters pertaining to the capitulation of, ii. 421-423.
- Negroes, i. 29, 193, 228-330.
- "Neptune," the, ii. 192.
- Netherlands, the, ii. 404.
- New Brunswick, i. 90, 123, 124.
- New England, i. 55, 123, 291; characteristics of her colonies, i. 25-29, 31, 33, 246, 273, 284, 286, ii. 89, 116, 117, 377; confederation of the colonies, i. 34; the provincial troops, i. 384-387, 399-402, ii. 338; rejoicing at the fall of Louisbourg, ii. 76-78; her joy over the victories in Canada, ii. 324, 325, 377-379.
- New France, character of the country with regard to attack and defence, i. 23, 24; extent of, in America, i. 23, 24, 39-43, 53, 71, 72, 75, 79, ii. 129, 316; the downfall of, ii. 378-382. See Canada.
- New Hampshire, ii. 120; invaded by parties from Canada, i. 176; the expedition sent against Crown Point, i. 286, 290, 291; money granted to, by Parliament, i. 382 note; Rogers' rangers, i. 431, 432; her sacrifices in time of war, ii. 86.
- New Haven, i. 291.
- New Jersey, i. 139, 327, 419, ii. 93; characteristics of, i. 33; aids Virginia, i. 168; Crown Point to be seized, i. 194; the "Jersey Blues," i. 320; money granted to, by Parliament, i. 382 note; Indian warfare, i. 422, 484.
- New Orleans, ii. 405; chain of forts connecting the city with Quebec, i. 36, 39-41; in the possession of France, ii. 405; given to Spain, ii. 406.
- New Oswego, i. 398, 411.
- New York, i. 40, 124, 141, 292, 310, 315, ii. 2, 3, 79, 162, 248, 402; questions of boundary, i. 28, 79, 195; matters of interest concerning the people and the place, i. 32-35, 59, 61, 328, 349, 350; expeditions of war fitted out by, i. 142, 144, 162, 173, 286, 292, 383, 474, ii. 93, 192; Indian complaints, i. 172, 176; council of governors held with Braddock, i. 191-195; plans of Shirley to repel French invasion, i. 193 (see Shirley); orders for the removal of the Protestant population of, i. 284 note; attitude of the Five Nations in time of war, i. 372; council of war held, i. 381; money granted to, by Parliament, i. 382 note; expeditions of

- war planned, i. 384, 469, 470; Indian warfare, i. 422; difficulty in quartering the troops in winter, i. 439, 440; exposed condition of the forts, i. 474, 475; rejoicing at the fall of Louisbourg, ii. 76.
- Newcastle, Duke of, i. 8, 194, ii. 40, 41, 397; at the head of the English government, i. 177, 178; error in Braddock's campaign, i. 196, 197; his influence over England, ii. 41, 43; blight of his administration, ii. 46; his idea of promotion in the army, ii. 191; influence upon the army, ii. 380-382; disliked by George III., ii. 392, 400.
- Newell, Chaplain, preached to the army before Lake George, i. 296.
- Newfoundland, i. 185, 471, ii. 402; the fisheries, ii. 405, 410.
- Niagara, Fort, i. 70, 75, 80, ii. 10, 127, 142, 160, 242, 370; situation and importance of the post, i. 75, 76, 79, 318, 324, ii. 243, 244, 248, 249; expedition against, i. 192, 194, 195, 233, 318-329, 373-376, 399, ii. 222, 381, 393; capture of, by Prideaux, ii. 242-249, 253.
- Niagara River, the, ii. 243.
- Niaouré Bay, i. 408, 409.
- Nicholson, conquest of Acadia, i. 90.
- Nîmes, i. 356.
- Nipissing Lake, i. 485.
- Nipissings, the, i. 40, 74, 154, 485-489; their missionary, i. 487; death of a chief, i. 493, 494.
- Nivernois, Duc de, sent to London to negotiate for peace, ii. 403.
- Niverville, i. 486.
- Noix, Isle aux, ii. 178, 195, 308, 367; the French entrenched at, ii. 238, 239, 241, 249, 265; the French retreat from, ii. 251-253.
- Normanville, brothers, i. 210.
- North America, i. 10. See America.
- North Carolina, i. 33, 187, 382, ii. 132; answers the appeal of Dinwiddie, i. 139, 142; condition of forces from, i. 162, 163; council of governors held with Braddock, i. 191-195; effect of the victory at Fort Duquesne, ii. 162.
- North pole, the, i. 20.
- Northampton, i. 290.
- Northern Department, the, ii. 393.
- Northwest Bay, i. 490.
- Nova Scotia, i. 239, 249, ii. 1, 181, 183, 192, 381; matters pertaining to Acadia, i. 90 (see Acadia and Acadians); rejoicing at the fall of Louisbourg, ii. 77; solitude of the forts, ii. 77, 78.
- Nuns, the, at Quebec, ii. 330. See Ursulines.

O.

- Oath of allegiance. See Acadians.
- Obadiah, name used in New England, i. 246.
- O'Callaghan, i. 514 note.
- Ochterlony, Captain, escapes from Indians' cruelty, ii. 232.
- Œdipus, ii. 9.
- Ogden, Captain, ii. 256; sufferings of the rangers, ii. 257.
- Ogdensburg, i. 38.
- Ohio Company, the, i. 53, 142, 155, 196; their trading-houses, i. 59, 132, 144, 145, 200.
- Ohio Indians, the, i. 59 note, 150, 153.
- Ohio River, the, i. 21, 24, 37, 39, 42, 43, 50, 60, 61, 63, 65, 86, 127, 128, 176, 207, 209, ii. 20, 21, 142-144; valley of, controlled by the French, i. 76 (see French); conflict of French and English for the surrounding territory, i. 128-134, 142-161, 318, 329-350, ii. 144-151, 244, 247; forts on, i. 137-139, 142, 143.
- Ojibwas, i. 130, 209, 486-489.
- Oneida Lake, i. 322, ii. 242.
- Oneidas, the, i. 288, 392, ii. 6, 128, 129; in the Iroquois mission, i. 65.
- Onondaga, i. 172, 173, 395; the Iroquois capital, i. 66; council held by Johnson, i. 391, 392.
- Onondaga River, the, i. 73, 322, ii. 128, 242.
- Onondagas, the, i. 392, ii. 246; efforts of the French to convert, i. 65, 171.
- Onontio, the, i. 67, 154.
- Ontario, Fort, i. 398, 410, 411, 420; burned to the ground, i. 415, 416.
- Ontario, Lake, i. 38, 65, 72, 75, 195, 289, 321, 322, 374, 376, 381, 382 note, 384, 398, 399, 408, 415, 418, ii. 127-129, 162, 195, 243, 249, 361; journey of Father Piquet, i. 69.
- Ord, Captain, mentioned in Campbell's letter, i. 227.
- Orléans, Isle d', ii. 199, 204, 207, 216, 229, 344, 362; position of Wolfe, ii. 213.
- Orléans, Point of, ii. 203, 211, 216, 219, 222, 270, 274, 281.
- Orme, Captain Robert, aide-de-camp of Braddock, i. 191, 202, 203, 224; wounded in the battle of the Monongahela, i. 219, 225; his account of Braddock's death, i. 225, 226; correspondence with Dinwiddie, i. 229-233.
- Orry, i. 15.

Osages, the, i. 43, 83.
 Osborn, Admiral, expedition under, ii. 49, 50.
 Osgood, Captain, i. 270, 272.
 Oswegatchie, i. 52, ii. 369; La Présentation, i. 65-67.
 Oswegatchie River, the, i. 38.
 Oswego, i. 38, 52, 70, 73, 74, 79, 88, 195, 321, 374, 467, ii. 128, 242, 369, 418; life of the garrison at, i. 62, 68, 69, 73, 350, 397, 398; French enmity towards, i. 78, 78 note, 288, 324-327, 374, 393, 405-416; arrival of Shirley's expedition, i. 322, 381, 384; importance of, i. 398, 399; account of the capture by the French, i. 405-416, 419, 420, 460-467, 475, ii. 127, 292, 320; murders committed by the French, ii. 2; return of Bradstreet, ii. 129; to be re-established, ii. 235; plans of Amherst, ii. 249.
 Ottawa River, the, i. 125-154, 372, ii. 369.
 Ottawas, the, i. 40, 57, 84, 209, 487 note; village of, i. 76; their cannibalism, i. 483; called to a council by Montcalm, i. 486-489; French allies, ii. 142.
 Otter Creek, ii. 241.
 Otway, his regiment at Albany, i. 399.
 Oudenarde, battle of, ii. 391.
 Oueskak, inhabitants removed from, i. 255.
 Oxford, i. 142.

P.

Pacific Ocean, the, ii. 406.
 Paine, Timothy, i. 404.
 Panama, ii. 401.
 Panet, Jean Claude, ii. 439.
 Parfouru, Madame de, ii. 427.
 Paris, i. 13, 14, 16, 186, 192, 311, 360, 361, 457, ii. 47, 322, 374; questions of American boundary, i. 86 (see France); trial of the dishonest officials, ii. 385, 386.
 Paris, the peace of, ii. 383-408.
 Parker, Colonel, his party captured by Indians, i. 484, 489.
 Parkman, Rev. Ebenezer, ii. 89 note.
 Parkman, George Francis, ii. 440.
 Parkman, William, opinion of Abercromby, ii. 89.
 Parliament, the, i. 6, 7, 167, 170, 181, ii. 41, 83, 84; taxation by, i. 171, 177, 193, ii. 413; raises money for campaigns in America, i. 195, 316, 382; money paid to Massachusetts, ii. 85; elections in 1761, ii. 392; the peace between England and France, ii. 406; resistance of the British colonies, ii. 413.
 Parliament of Paris, the, i. 363.
 Passamaquoddy Bay, ii. 183.
 Patten, Captain, assists Bradstreet, i. 395.
 Patterson's Creek, i. 342.
 Patton, John, i. 80.
 Paxton, town of, i. 344.
 Peabody, his bravery, i. 428.
 Péan, i. 458, ii. 8, 20; his wife, i. 87, 88, ii. 9, 19, 28, 29; promotion of, i. 88; his official knavery, i. 129, ii. 22-24, 28, 31-33, 37 note; letter to Duquesne, i. 129; effort to descend the Ohio thwarted, i. 130, 131; at La Chine, ii. 9; thrown into the Bastille, ii. 385.
 Péan, Madame, i. 87, 88, ii. 9, 19, 28, 29.
 Peleus, ii. 184.
 Penisseault, Antoine, ii. 20; official knavery, ii. 23, 24; thrown into the Bastille, ii. 385.
 Penisseault, Madame, ii. 29.
 Penn, Richard, proprietary of Pennsylvania, i. 338.
 Penn, Thomas, proprietary of Pennsylvania, i. 338.
 Penn, William, his plan of union for the colonies, i. 34; first proprietary of Pennsylvania, i. 338, 339.
 Pennahouel, chief of the Ottawas, i. 487; his speech, i. 487-489.
 Pennoyer, Jesse, ii. 258 note.
 Pennsylvania, i. 227, ii. 130; matters of interest concerning the people and the place, i. 25, 31-33, 35, 37, 42, 45, 54, 59, 60, 86, 193-198, 339; efforts of Dinwiddie to obtain help from, i. 139-141; relations of the Assembly with the people, i. 142, 165-168, 337, 339-350, 422, 423, ii. 131; commissioners sent to Albany, i. 173-176; German population, i. 193; sufferings of the settlers, i. 329, 330, 336-350, 365, 422, 423, ii. 131, 132; question of taxing proprietary lands, i. 337-341, 344-347, 349; a militia law passed, i. 348; roads to be made by the army, ii. 132-134; Indian allies sought for, ii. 142-147; expedition of Major Grant, ii. 152.
 Penobscot River, the, i. 485.
 Penobscots, i. 514 note.
 Pepperell, his regiment, i. 194, 320, 382, 398, 410.
 Pepperell, Fort, condition of, i. 411.
 Perière, war-party sent out under, i. 429.

- Peronney, Captain, killed in battle, i. 230.
- Perrot, Isle, ii. 371.
- Persians, ii. 323.
- Perth, ii. 185.
- Peter the Great, i. 17, 18.
- Peter III., ii. 399.
- Peter, Captain, the mission of Frederic Post, ii. 149, 150.
- Peticodiac, disaster to the English, i. 275, 276.
- Petrie, Johan Jost, taken prisoner, ii. 7.
- Peyronney, Ensign, i. 158. See Peronney.
- Peyton, Lieutenant, his escape from Indians, ii. 232.
- Philadelphia, i. 196, 219 note, 228, 231, 233, ii. 132, 161; relative size of, i. 31; its prosperity, i. 336, 337; influence of the Quakers, i. 336, 337, 339; council of, i. 426; difficulty in quartering the troops, i. 439, 440; rejoicing at the fall of Louisbourg, ii. 76-78.
- Philippines, the, ii. 401.
- Philipsbourg, siege of, i. 358.
- Philistines, ii. 126.
- Phillips, governor of Acadia, i. 97, 101 note.
- Phillips, Lieutenant, surrender of, ii. 13, 14.
- Phipp, Governor, letter from John Ashley to, i. 387.
- Piacenza, i. 359.
- Piankishaws, the, i. 83.
- Pichon, Thomas, commissary at Fort Beauséjour, i. 243; his treachery, i. 243, 243 note; his writings, i. 243 note, 251 note, 266, ii. 81 note.
- Pickawillany, i. 52, 55-58, 81, 209; the Indians cajoled by the English, i. 82, 83; the town attacked, and the English traders slaughtered, i. 84, 85.
- Pique Town (Pickawillany), i. 52; importance of, i. 52.
- Piquet, Abbé, i. 65 note, 392; his mission and plans, i. 38, 52, 65-75, 78, 171, 414, 487, ii. 242, 243, 369, 417, 418; his banners, ii. 418.
- Pisiquid, i. 94, 244.
- Pisiquid River, the, i. 268.
- Pitt, William, i. 6, 408, ii. 40, 190, 432; his characteristics and his politics, i. 8, 9, ii. 42-49, 391, 392, 398, 400, 407; his relations with Newcastle, i. 179, 400; his decline in power, i. 469, 470 note, ii. 41, 44, 45, 398, 399, 401; his views and plans for war, ii. 47, 48, 83-85, 89, 118, 131, 132, 141, 167, 193, 235, 236, 240, 391, 392, 400, 401, 408; report made by Pownall, ii. 84, 85; naming of Pittsburg, ii. 159; the expeditions against Louisbourg and Quebec, ii. 191-193, 194 note, 268-271, 323, 345; disliked by George III., ii. 391, 392, 397; negotiations with Choiseul, ii. 393-397; an explanation demanded of Spain, ii. 396, 397; the peace of Paris, ii. 400-407; carried into the House of Commons, ii. 406, 407.
- Pitt, Fort, built by Stanwix, ii. 159.
- Pittsburg, ii. 235, 236, 241; site of, i. 46, 60, 142, 143, 207; naming of the place, ii. 159.
- Plassey, the victory of, ii. 45, 408.
- Plates, leaden, bearing inscriptions, i. 43. See Céloron.
- Plymouth Colony, the, i. 245.
- Pococke, Admiral, Sir George, ii. 401, 402.
- Pointe-aux-Trembles, ii. 19, 224, 263, 278, 341, 361.
- Poisson, Jeanne. See Pompadour.
- Poland, i. 10.
- Polson, Captain, i. 227, 230.
- Pomeroy, Abigail, ii. 237.
- Pomeroy, Rev. Benjamin, ii. 237, 238.
- Pomeroy, Daniel, in the expedition against Crown Point, i. 291, 311.
- Pomeroy, Rachel, i. 311.
- Pomeroy, Lieutenant-Colonel Seth, i. 290; in the expedition against Crown Point, i. 290, 291; quotations from his letters, i. 291-294, 311, 312, 316 note; the battle of Lake George, i. 303, 305, 312 note.
- Pomeroy, Seth, jr., i. 291.
- Pomeroy, Theodore, i. 316 note.
- Pompadour Madame de (Jeanne Poisson), i. 2, 353, ii. 44, 394; her political influence, i. 2, 3, 15, 179, 354, 355, 363, ii. 38-45, 173, 174, 393, 409.
- Pondicherry, ii. 389, 400.
- Pont-à-Buot, i. 248.
- Pontbriand, Bishop, ii. 265, 309.
- Pontiac, i. 209, 347 note, ii. 122.
- Pontleroy, ii. 100.
- "Porcupine," the, ii. 284.
- Port Royal (Annapolis), i. 108.
- Portland, former name of, i. 169.
- Portland, town on Lake Erie, i. 38.
- Portneuf, to build a trading-house at Toronto, i. 69, 70.
- Portugal, ii. 402, 411.
- Post, Christian Frederic, ii. 144; his mission, ii. 144-149; sent as envoy to the hostile tribes, ii. 144-151; his journal, ii. 147 note, 163 note.
- Potomac River, the, i. 59, 191, 200.
- Pottawattamies, the, i. 76, 130, 209, 437, 438, 486-489, ii. 142.

Pouchot, Captain, i. 374, ii. 10, 11; the attack on Oswego, i. 409, 410; arrives at the camp of Montcalm, ii. 103; attacked, and surrenders at Niagara, ii. 242, 249; the surrender of Fort Lévis, ii. 370.

Poulariez, Colonel, the capitulation of Quebec, ii. 291, 303.

Pownall, Thomas, Governor of Massachusetts, i. 513 note; ii. 84, 430, 431; despatch sent to Loudon, ii. 1; statement concerning the war-debt of Massachusetts, ii. 84-86.

Prague, the battle of, ii. 39.

Prairie à la Roche, i. 41.

Preble, Major Jedediah, i. 275, 276.

Presburg, the Diet at, i. 19.

Presbyterians, the, i. 32, ii. 116, 117; in Pennsylvania, i. 31, 336-339, 347.

Presquile, i. 89, 128, 131, 137, 144, ii. 159, 160, 244; the fort burned, ii. 247.

Prévost, the intendant at Louisbourg, i. 104, 105, ii. 72, 81 note; memorial brought to Drucour, ii. 72-74.

Prideaux, Brigadier, ii. 235, 236; the capture of Fort Niagara, ii. 242-249, 253; his death, ii. 245, 249.

Prince Edward's Island, i. 98, ii. 74, 75.

Princess's Bastion, the, ii. 55, 64.

Pringle, Captain, joins a scouting-party, ii. 12; his bravery, ii. 13-16.

Protestantism, i. 31, 355.

Province Arms, the, ii. 76.

Provincial troops, the, ii. 116, 119. See Army.

"Prudent," the, ii. 67-69.

Prussia, political condition of, i. 2, 17, 19, 353-355, ii. 399, 400, 405, 409; the Seven Years War, ii. 38, 39, 409; successes of, ii. 46; campaigns under Frederic, ii. 387, 388; policy of George III., ii. 393; number of lives lost in the war, ii. 409.

Puritans, the, i. 26, 29; the settlers in Massachusetts, i. 26; the class holding Roundhead traditions, i. 29; dislike of the ways of the Virginians, i. 30.

Putnam, Israel, in the expedition against Crown Point, i. 291; his bravery, i. 428, 429; meeting with Langy's men, ii. 96, 97; his biography, ii. 123; taken prisoner, ii. 123, 124; his adventures, ii. 123-126; tortures inflicted upon, ii. 124-126; exchanged, ii. 126, 127.

Puysieux, Marquis de, i. 15.

Pygmalion, i. 465.

Pyncheon, Doctor, i. 306.

Pyrrhic dance, the, i. 407.

Pythoness, the, i. 438.

Q.

Quakers, the, their attitude toward the Indians, and their influence in Pennsylvania, i. 31, 32, 141, 166, 193, 196, 337-341, 344-347, 349, 422, ii. 142; their trades, i. 339.

Quebec, i. 126 note, 184 note, 244, 282, 468, ii. 18, 212, 224, 250, 261, 306; rule of the military governor, i. 22; chain of French forts connecting the city with New Orleans, i. 36, 39-41; priests of Acadia controlled by the diocese of, i. 94, 255, 256; relations with the Acadians, i. 242, 282, 283 (see Acadians); questions of French conquest, i. 238; described by Montcalm, i. 456; the Lenten season, i. 458; Montcalm retires to, ii. 7, 8; social life among the officials, ii. 18-30; La Frépoune, ii. 24; war-policy of Pitt, ii. 47, 48; preparations for an English attack, ii. 79, 176; the expedition fitted out against, ii. 191-194; the siege and reduction of, ii. 195-233, 299-325, 325 note, 326 note, 436-438, 442; census of, ii. 178; natural defences of, ii. 178, 209, 289; preparations for the defence of, ii. 198-200, 209, 210, 215 (see Montcalm); the fire-ships, ii. 201, 210-212, 227; the Palace Gate, ii. 201; scarcity of food, ii. 203; the Cathedral, ii. 208; the Seminary garden, ii. 208; the Recollets, ii. 208; the Ursulines, ii. 208; the Jesuits, ii. 208; the proclamations issued by Wolfe, ii. 213, 214, 223, 225, 226, 261; the town bombarded, and dwellings burned, ii. 214, 215, 261, 262, 265; the disaster of Montmorenci, ii. 228-233, 259, 268, 269; the siege continued, ii. 259-272; the Upper and Lower Towns, ii. 267; despatches sent from Wolfe to England, ii. 270, 272, 323; the Heights of Abraham ascended, ii. 272-288; action of Holmes's squadron, ii. 278, 280; the last battle between Wolfe and Montcalm, ii. 288-297, 298 note, 305; the Plains of Abraham, ii. 289; the death of Wolfe, ii. 297; the French routed, ii. 299-305; the town abandoned by the army, ii. 307-310; the death of Montcalm, ii. 308, 309; the grief and poverty of the people, ii. 310, 311; Lévis attempts to save the city, ii. 312-315; the capitulation, of, ii. 315-318; the city left in command of Murray, ii. 317; the rejoicing over the victory, ii. 323-325;

- authorities for information concerning, ii. 325 note, 326 note; drawings made of the ruins, ii. 327; confusion after the siege, ii. 327-331; kindness of the nuns, ii. 330, 331, 335; the rule of Murray, ii. 331-333; rumors of an attack from the French, ii. 335-340; the expedition of Lévis against, and the battle of Ste.-Foy, ii. 340-358, 442-444; arrival of the British squadron, ii. 355, 356; the siege raised, ii. 357, 358; the fall of Canada, ii. 360-382; self-devotion of the missionaries, ii. 412; maps referring to, ii. 440, 441.
- Quebec, basin of, ii. 213, 282.
- Quebec, Bishop of, i. 106, 255, 260.
- Queen's Bastion, the, ii. 55, 68.
- Queen's Battery, the, at Quebec, ii. 208.
- Querdisien-Tremais, to investigate the frauds in Canada, ii. 36.
- R.
- Race, Cape, i. 185.
- "Racehorse," the, ii. 343, 358.
- Rameau, his estimate concerning Canadian population, i. 20 note; Acadian emigrants, i. 235 note.
- Ramesay, Chevalier de, ii. 202; his battery refused to Montcalm, ii. 292, 293, 346; his field-pieces in action, ii. 294; his last interview with Montcalm, ii. 308; at Montcalm's funeral, ii. 309, 310; left in charge at Quebec, without supplies, i. 310-314; calls a council of war, ii. 311, 312; the capitulation of Quebec, ii. 315-318; his sister, ii. 331.
- Ranelagh Gardens, the, i. 7.
- Rapide Plat, the, ii. 370.
- Rascal, Fort, i. 398, 411, 415.
- Raymond, Comte de, commandant at the post on the Maumee, i. 52, 82; command taken at Louisbourg, i. 102; royal instructions given to, with regard to the Indians and Acadians, i. 102, ii. 420, 421.
- Raynal, Abbé, his ideal picture of the Acadians, i. 258.
- Raystown, ii. 133, 135, 137, 141, 154, 156.
- Rea, Dr. Caleb, his religious views, ii. 116-118.
- Reading, i. 344.
- Recollets, the, ii. 208, 328.
- Redstone Creek, i. 145, 155; English storehouse on, i. 144; the storehouse burned, i. 161.
- Rehoboam, ii. 115.
- Rennes, i. 362.
- Repentigny, ii. 28, 218, 316.
- Restoration, the, i. 5.
- Revolution, the, in America, i. 3, 4, 34, 164 note, 219, 319, ii. 119, 351.
- Revolution, the French, i. 14.
- Reynolds, Sir Joshua, i. 202.
- Rhine, the, i. 16, ii. 400.
- Rhode Island, i. 382 note, ii. 93: the colony compared with others, i. 25; men voted for the expedition against Crown Point, i. 286; character of the troops from, i. 292.
- Richelieu, i. 10, ii. 47; power given to, by Louis XIII., i. 15.
- Richelieu River, the, i. 289, 378, 428, 453, ii. 249, 332.
- "Richmond," the, frigate, i. 205.
- Rickson, Lieutenant-Colonel, ii. 190.
- Rigaud de Vaudreuil, brother of Governor Vaudreuil, i. 408, 463, 485, ii. 86; capture of Oswego, i. 408-420; his party attacks Fort William Henry, i. 448-451, 456; festivities given to his officers, i. 457; seeks to gain Indian allies, i. 475; his command, i. 458, 459, 477; frauds in trade, ii. 27.
- Rigaud, Madame de, ii. 20.
- Rimouski, country of, i. 125.
- Roanoke, return of Gist, i. 58.
- Robison, Professor John, ii. 285.
- Robinson, Sir Thomas, i. 201, 241; in the House of Commons, i. 179; correspondence of, i. 183, 239, 240.
- Roche, Lieutenant, ii. 12, 13; his adventures, and escape from death, ii. 14-16.
- Rochebeaucourt, stationed at Pointe-aux-Trembles, ii. 361.
- Rocheport, i. 182, 183, 184, ii. 48-51; the expedition against, ii. 189.
- Rochester, i. 71.
- Rocky Mountains, the, i. 20, 129, 130.
- Rodney, Admiral, sails for Martinique, ii. 401.
- Rogers, Richard, i. 432; his corpse outraged, ii. 5 note.
- Rogers, Robert, i. 389, 390, ii. 5 note; exploits of his rangers, i. 431, 432, 437-446, 471, ii. 11-16, 90-94, 97, 121-124, 165, 221, 251-258 note, 261, 347, 362, 368; his portrait, i. 431; his character and bravery, i. 431-433, ii. 254, 257; sent to destroy the Abenakis town, ii. 251-258; suffers from hunger, ii. 254-257.
- Rogers Rock, i. 429, 441, 478, 490, ii. 12, 15, 94, 95.

Rollo, Lord, ii. 78; follows Murray, ii. 363.

Roma, quotation from, i. 96, 97.

Roman Empire, the, i. 16, 17.

Roman politique, disquisition entitled, i. 126.

Romans, ii. 323.

Rome, i. 321.

Roquemaure, i. 298; joined by Bougainville, ii. 367, 368; at Montreal, ii. 372.

Rose, Captain, i. 227.

Rosbach, ii. 39, 46, 408.

Rostaing killed, i. 186.

Roubaud, Jesuit missionary, i. 480, 487; his description of an Indian war-feast, i. 480-482; Indian cruelty described, i. 482, 483, 493, 505, 506; statements in relation to the massacre at Fort William Henry, i. 512, 514 note; the dishonesty in Canada, ii. 321, 322; papers given to, by Montcalm, ii. 321, 322, 325 note, 326 note.

Rouillé, De, colonial minister at Versailles, i. 105 note; instructions given to La Jonquière injurious to the English, i. 78-81, 84, 105 note; instructions to Duquesne, i. 86, 87; official documents relating to the Acadians, i. 95, 96; aids the French to destroy the English, i. 101, 102, ii. 418; treachery and double-dealing of, i. 105 note, 106 note.

Rous, Captain, fires on the "St. François," i. 115; in the expedition sent against Nova Scotia, i. 247-250, 253.

Rousseau, i. 16; philosophy of, i. 126.

Roussillon, Royal, battalion of, i. 363, ii. 104, 107, 230; sent to defend Ticonderoga, i. 377, 378; advance of the French upon Fort William Henry, i. 477, 491; the fall of Quebec, ii. 292.

Royal Americans, the, ii. 93, 132, 133, 232; serve in the expedition of Forbes, ii. 132-163; in Grant's expedition, ii. 151; at the siege of Quebec, ii. 230-233, 290.

Royal battery, the, ii. 208.

Royal William, the, ii. 317.

Royale, l'Isle, i. 109.

Ruggles, the battle at Lake George, i. 307; his regiment, ii. 378.

Russell, ii. 442.

Russia, influence of Peter the Great, i. 17, 18; political outlook of, i. 353, 354, ii. 38-40, 386, 387, 393; peace with Prussia and Sweden, ii. 399, 400.

Ryswick, the treaty of, i. 43.

S.

S—, Miss Sylvia, i. 188.

Sabbath, the, observance of, i. 240, 295, 296.

Sabrevois, i. 486.

Sackett's Harbor, former name of, i. 408.

Sacs, the, i. 130, 486-489.

Saint-Andrew, ii. 126.

Saint-Ange, i. 83.

St. Augustin, ii. 307, 314, 336, 342.

Saint-Blin, ii. 37 note.

St. Charles River, the, ii. 21, 200, 201, 285, 289, 300, 302, 307, 314, 348, 436; the French camp, ii. 208, 209.

St.-Denis, Ruisseau, ii. 287.

Saint Florentine, Marquis de, i. 15.

St. Francis, the mission of, i. 209, 371, 480, 485, ii. 251, 321; Jesuit influence, ii. 144; the Abenakis attacked by Rogers, ii. 251, 253-258 note.

St. Francis River, the, ii. 254.

"St. François," brig, i. 115.

St. George, i. 470, ii. 75, 355.

St. Germain, i. 14.

St. Helen, Island of, i. 458, ii. 375.

Saint-Ignace, Mère Aimable Dubé de, ii. 442.

St. James, i. 30.

St. Jean, Isle, i. 98, 107, 109, 110, 235, 281, ii. 74, 75, 78.

St. Jean River, the, i. 115, 241-253, 282, 283, ii. 78, 368, 385.

St. Joachim burned by order of Wolfe, ii. 261.

St. John, city, i. 428, ii. 301, 367, 368.

St. John, Fort, i. 24, 453; abandoned by the French, ii. 368.

Saint John's taken by the French, and retaken by the English, ii. 402.

Saint Joseph River, the, i. 40.

Saint-Julien, Lieutenant-Colonel de, the defence of Louisbourg, ii. 59.

St.-Laurent, visit of Knox to the church of, ii. 207, 208.

St. Lawrence, Gulf of, i. 39, 115, 123, ii. 79, 80, 384; islands in, ceded to Great Britain, ii. 405.

St. Lawrence River, the, i. 3, 4, 20, 22, 38, 65, 68, 123, 124, 365, 453, ii. 8, 79, 172, 175, 176, 179, 182, 192-195, 249-253, 368; rapids of, ii. 178, 242, 370, 371; measures of defence taken during the siege of Quebec, ii. 200, 201, 204, 208-213, 219, 289, 304; danger in passing through the Traverse, ii. 204-206; steepness of the banks, ii. 228; action of the fleet of Holmes, ii. 278-285; expedition of Lévis, ii. 341; humanity rewarded, ii. 343,

- 344; arrival of the "Lowestoffe," ii. 355; the river blockaded, ii. 360; islands ceded to Great Britain, ii. 405.
- St. Louis, i. 37, ii. 28.
- St. Louis, the cross of the Order of, ii. 174, 426.
- St. Louis, site of, i. 41.
- St. Louis, Lake, ii. 371.
- St. Lucia, ii. 401, 405.
- St. Malo, ii. 33, 47.
- St. Michael, ii. 267.
- St. Nicolas, ii. 279, 280.
- Saint-Ours, i. 491.
- Saint-Ours, Madame de, i. 458.
- St. Patrick's Day, i. 446; at Fort Cumberland, ii. 182.
- St. Paul, village sacked and burned, ii. 261.
- St. Paul's Church, ii. 76, 398.
- St. Philippe, a French hamlet, i. 41.
- Saint-Pierre, Legardeur de, i. 129, 143, 144; journey of exploration made by, i. 130-138; letter from Governor Dinwiddie introducing Washington, i. 132, 133-135; his dealings with Washington, i. 134, 135, 138; leads the Indians in the expedition of Dieskau, i. 297; his death, i. 303.
- St. Pierre Island, given to France, ii. 405.
- St. Roch, ii. 222, 300, 311, 344.
- St. Sacrement, Lac, name of, changed to Lake George, i. 315.
- St.-Servan, capture of, ii. 47.
- Saint-Véran, Madame de, the mother of Montcalm, i. 356, 359; letters from her son quoted, i. 360-362, 372, 373, 454, 457, ii. 112 note, 164, 174, 176.
- St. Vincent, ii. 401, 405.
- St. Yotoc, i. 48.
- Sainte Anna-de-la-Pérade, ii. 19.
- Sainte-Claude, Mère de, ii. 331.
- Sainte-Foy, ii. 306, 327-358, 381; Quebec after the siege, ii. 321-333; occupied by the English, ii. 335, 342; expedition of Lévis against Quebec, ii. 342-358, 442, 444.
- Sainte Marie, Fort, garrison at, i. 75.
- Sainte-Thérèse, ii. 366.
- Samos, post of, ii. 276, 288, 291.
- Sander. See Lauder.
- Saratoga, i. 387, 401, 452; the fort burned, i. 174.
- Sardanapalus, ii. 44.
- Sardinia, i. 19.
- Saul, George, commissary of supplies, i. 278, 279.
- Saunders, Admiral, ii. 192; aids Wolfe in the reduction of Quebec, ii. 192, 194 note, 268, 272-274, 282, 290; his fleet sails for England, ii. 317.
- "Sauvage," the, ship, i. 363.
- Saxe, Marshal, i. 12, 180, 182, 310; his death, i. 10, 181.
- Saxony, i. 10, ii. 38; joins the league against Prussia, i. 355.
- Saxony, Elector of, the, i. 10.
- Scarroyaddy, Indian chief, i. 204.
- Schenectady, village of, i. 321, 322, ii. 7, 86.
- Schuyler, General, i. 319, ii. 98, 126, 127; action between Bradstreet and Villiers, i. 394-396.
- Schuyler, Mrs., i. 319; her affection for Lord Howe, ii. 91, 98.
- Schuyler, Pedrom, ii. 98.
- Schuyler family, the, i. 32, 33.
- Scioto, town of, i. 48, 49.
- Scioto River, the, i. 55.
- Scipio, i. 420.
- Scotch, the, in Pennsylvania, i. 31, 339.
- Scotland, ii. 49, 185.
- Scott, Lieutenant-Colonel George, i. 246; the siege of Beauséjour, i. 249-253; his gallant action, ii. 60.
- Scurvy, i. 131, ii. 339, 352.
- Ségur, Count, quotation from, i. 16.
- Seneca, Lake, i. 54.
- Senecas, the, i. 44; visited by Bienville, i. 44, 45; efforts of the French to convert, i. 65, 70, 71, 171; their alliances, ii. 142-144.
- Senegal, ii. 47, 400, 406.
- Senezergues, mortally wounded, ii. 303.
- Seven Years War, the, i. 3, 4, ii. 38, 39, 405-407, 409; deportment of British officers, ii. 119.
- Seventy-eighth Regiment, the, at Quebec, ii. 298 note.
- Sewell, Colonel Matthew, i. 310; letter to Holderness quoted, i. 310.
- Sharpe, Governor of Maryland, i. 191, 201, 202; council of governors held with Braddock, i. 191-195.
- Shawanoes, the, i. 40, 45, 46, 48, 57, 130, 209, 391, 392; their attitude towards the English, i. 59, 203, 329, 343, 344, ii. 150, 151; present at a convention of Indians, ii. 142, 143.
- Shebbeare, Dr., i. 196 note, 197 note.
- Shepherd, Captain, i. 434; his capture and escape, i. 434, 435.
- Sheppard, Jack, i. 7.
- Sherbrooke, ii. 258 note.
- Shingas, Indian chief, ii. 145.
- Ship, sign of the, a tavern, i. 227.
- Ship-building, i. 72, 73.
- Shippensburg, ii. 136, 142.
- Shirley, Captain John, son of Gov-

- ernor Shirley, i. 323, 326; extracts from his letter to Governor Morris, i. 323, 324; a victim of the war, i. 324 note; his popularity, i. 324 note.
- Shirley, William, Governor of Massachusetts, i. 123, 168; tries to repel the French invasions, i. 141, 170, 171, 192, 234; his dealings with the Assembly of Massachusetts, i. 168, 169, 241, 285 note; council held with Braddock, i. 191-195; his French wife, i. 192; defends taxation by Parliament, i. 193; his troops, i. 194, 246, 320, 326, ii. 380; the decisions of the council at Albany, i. 194, 195; leads the expedition against Niagara and Fort Frontenac, i. 194-196, 318-329, 374, ii. 127; desires Mackellar to draw plans for Braddock's expedition, i. 221 note; his view of Dunbar's conduct, i. 233 note; becomes commander-in-chief of the troops in America, i. 233, 245, 328; his correspondence with Governor Lawrence quoted, i. 239; his plans with regard to expelling the French from Nova Scotia, i. 234, 239-241, 245-247, 257; the expedition sent against Crown Point, i. 285-317; his campaigns boldly planned, i. 318; border warfare, ii. 318-350; at Fort Oswego, i. 322-324; loss of his sons, i. 323, 324 note; councils of war called, i. 325, 326; the Niagara expedition abandoned, i. 326, 381; his quarrels with Johnson and with Delancey, i. 327, 328; letters from Governor Morris quoted, i. 340, 343; plans for a new campaign, i. 381, 382, 393, 447; renews his expedition against Niagara, and Frontenac, i. 381-383, 393; recalled from command, i. 383, 399, 400, 420; a cabal formed against, i. 383; his zeal and courage, i. 384, 400; his boatmen placed under Bradstreet, i. 393, 405; sends men to defend Oswego, i. 393-398, 405, 413 note, 420; interview with Loudon, i. 399; Oswego seized by the French, i. 407-416; vindicates himself, i. 413 note, 420, 420 note; causes leading to his failure, i. 417, 418; Loudon prejudiced against, i. 420, 468; sails for England, i. 421; made governor of the Bahamas, i. 421; the opinion of Franklin concerning, i. 421; succeeded by Governor Pownall, ii. 84.
- Shirley, William, son of the governor, secretary of Braddock, i. 187, 188, 191; letter quoted concerning Braddock's expedition, i. 201, 202; shot through the head, i. 219, 229, 323; letter to Governor Morris quoted, i. 323.
- Shirley, Fort, i. 423.
- Short, Richard, drawings of Quebec after the siege, ii. 327 note.
- Shubenacadie River, the, i. 113.
- Shute, John, i. 444.
- Silesia, i. 19, 353, 354, ii. 40, 388.
- Silhouette, i. 122, 123.
- Sillery, ii. 215, 274, 276, 288, 333, 344, 346, 347, 444.
- Sinclair, Sir John, quartermaster-general, i. 198, ii. 133, 137; in Braddock's expedition, i. 214; wounded in the battle of the Monongahela, i. 219, 227; despatch sent from General Forbes, ii. 137, his peculiarities, ii. 138, 139; his dealings with Lieutenant-Colonel Stephen, ii. 138, 139.
- Small-pox, the, i. 83.
- Smith, Colonel James, i. 211; cruelties practised by the Indians upon, i. 209, 210; his statement concerning the defeat of Braddock's army, i. 221-223.
- Smith, John, i. 227.
- Smith, William, his remark concerning the provincial army, i. 292.
- Smith, William, a Rhode Island soldier, his bravery, ii. 108.
- Smollett, i. 6, 159, 178.
- Smyth, an English traveller, i. 164 note.
- "Siren," the, i. 247.
- "Sirène," the, ship, i. 363.
- Six Nations, the, i. 57; desire to remain neutral, i. 390. See Five Nations.
- Sodus Bay, i. 72.
- Sorel, ii. 364, 365.
- Soubise, i. 10.
- South Bay, i. 295, 296, 298, 301, 313, 388, 435, 496, ii. 121, 241.
- South Carolina, i. 33, 139, 151, 152, 176; commissioners sent to meet the Indians at Albany, i. 61; extent of British frontier, ii. 381.
- Spain, i. 9, 19, ii. 49, 395; succession of Carlos III., ii. 396; the Family Compact, ii. 396, 397; change of rulers, ii. 396, 399; influence of Pitt, ii. 400, 401; expedition of Pococke, ii. 401, 402; receives Havana from England, ii. 405; the peace of Paris, ii. 405, 406; acquisitions in America, ii. 406, 413; sinking into decay, ii. 411.
- Speakman, Captain, despatches sent to Winslow, i. 276.

Spikeman, Captain, one of Rogers' scouting-party, i. 441; adventures of the expedition, i. 441-445.
 Spithead, embarkation of Wolfe, ii. 192.
 Split, Cape, i. 268.
 Spruce-beer, i. 259, ii. 236, 237, 354.
 Stanhope, Earl, ii. 194 note.
 Stanley, his sketch of the Duc de Choiseul, ii. 393, 394; at Versailles, ii. 395.
 Stanley, Dean, ii. 433.
 Stanwix, Brigadier, new fort to be erected at the Great Carrying Place, ii. 129; builds Fort Pitt, ii. 159; to relieve Pittsburg, ii. 236; Pittsburg endangered, ii. 244.
 Stanwix, Fort, ii. 242.
 Stark, John, i. 432, 446; his celebrity, i. 291; in the expedition against Crown Point, i. 291; adventures in a scouting-party of Rogers, i. 441-445; wounded, i. 451 note; serves under Abercromby, ii. 94.
 Stephen, Adam, matters pertaining to Washington and Jumonville, i. 151 note, ii. 422; trouble with Sir J. Sinclair, ii. 138, 139; sent to succor Rogers, ii. 256, 257.
 Stephen, Lieutenant, expelled from the service, ii. 257.
 Sterne, i. 6.
 Stevens, the Indian interpreter, i. 288; escapes from Quebec, ii. 278.
 Stewart, Captain, i. 220.
 Still, Isaac, ii. 149, 150.
 Stillwater, i. 387, 452.
 Stirling, ii. 185.
 Stobo, Major Robert, i. 159, ii. 277; detained at Quebec as a hostage, ii. 277; his escape, ii. 277, 278; gives Wolfe the result of his knowledge of Quebec, ii. 277, 278; his memoirs, ii. 278 note.
 Stockbridge, ii. 256.
 Stoue, William L., i. 316 note, ii. 237 note.
 Stuarts, the, i. 6, ii. 49, 392.
 "Success," the, i. 247.
 Suffield, i. 402.
 Sugar-trade, the, ii. 403.
 Sulpitian priests, the, i. 38, 52, 66, 458, ii. 144.
 Superior, Lake, i. 75, 372, 486.
 Susquehanna River, the, i. 342, 343, 391, ii. 143.
 "Sutherland," the, ii. 224, 280, 284.
 Sweden joins the league against Prussia, i. 355; the Seven Years War, ii. 38, 39; peace with Prussia, ii. 399.
 Swedes in Pennsylvania, i. 31.
 Sydney, ii. 78.

T.

Tadoussac, i. 126 note.
 Talon du Boulay, Angélique Louise, i. 358.
 Tantemar, i. 120, 241, 254, 255, ii. 181.
 Tassé, citation from, i. 67 note.
 Tatten, Captain, i. 227.
 Taxation, i. 171, 193, 337, 338, 344-347, ii. 392, 402, 413.
 Teedyuscung, Indian chief, ii. 143.
 Temple, Lord, ii. 194 note, 397.
 Thames River, the, ii. 206.
 Thirty-fifth Regiment, the, ii. 298 note.
 Thomas, Surgeon John, his diary quoted, i. 250.
 Thompson, James, ii. 351; diary of, ii. 439.
 Thousand Islands, the, i. 68, ii. 369.
 Three Rivers, i. 485, 486, ii. 20, 264, 312, 341, 360, 363; census of, ii. 178.
 Ticonderoga, i. 350, 453, ii. 2, 16 note, 83, 102, 119, 162, 166, 180, 212, 292; camp at, i. 373; advance of Dieskau, i. 297-299; occupied by the French, i. 313, 314; attempt against, i. 374; held by the French, i. 374, 376, 390, 415, 442; its importance and position, i. 377, 378, 427, 428, 477, ii. 99, 100; plans of the English to capture, i. 381, 382, 387-389, 399, 405, 406, 447; war-parties sent out from, i. 429-431; exploits of Rogers' rangers, i. 433-437, 441-445, ii. 11-16; a small party left in charge, i. 439, 448; preparations to attack Fort William Henry, i. 477; held by Montcalm's forces, i. 490, 491; expedition against, led by General Abercromby, ii. 86-113 note; the battle and Montcalm's victory, ii. 104-113 note, 128, 164, 431-436; war-parties sent from, by the French, ii. 121-124; Putnam carried to, ii. 126; question of renewing the attack upon, by the English, ii. 129, 130, 197; Bourlamaque established at, ii. 195; approach of Amherst, ii. 210, 222; captured by the English, ii. 235-240; blown up by the French, ii. 239, 265; the legend of Inverawe, ii. 433-436.
 Titcomb, Colonel Moses, i. 290; his service at Louisbourg, i. 290; the battle at Lake George, i. 307.
 Tobacco, i. 30, 33.
 Tobago Island, to belong to England, ii. 405.
 Tomahawk Camp, ii. 161.
 Tongue Mountain, i. 491.

Tories, the, i. 6, 392, 398.
 Toronto, i. 83; trading-house at, i. 70, 72.
 Toronto, Fort, i. 69, 70; plan of capture by the English, i. 381.
 Toulon, ii. 49, 50.
 Touraine, i. 76.
 Tourmente, Cape, ii. 204, 206, 261.
 Tournois, Father, i. 64, 65; his illegal trade, i. 65 note.
 Townshend Captain, his efforts to assist the German settlement, ii. 7; his death, ii. 239.
 Townshend, Charles, secretary of war, i. 8, ii. 393.
 Townshend, George, his character, ii. 193; serves under Wolfe at the siege of Quebec, ii. 193, 216, 217, 266, 267, 274, 289, 290, 294, 298 note, 314; succeeds Monckton in command, ii. 304; note sent from the dying Montcalm, ii. 308, 309; the terms of capitulation for Quebec, ii. 315, 316; returns to England, ii. 317.
 Tracy, Lieutenant, ii. 123.
 Trading-posts, i. 25, 70, 87, 192, 193; at Will's Creek, i. 59, 132, 142, 199, 200.
 Trent, William, i. 42, 138, 342; at Pickawillany, i. 85 note; in Washington's expedition to the West, i. 138; his band of backwoodsmen, i. 142, 145; sufferings of the people, i. 342.
 Trepezec, ii. 94, 95.
Troupes de terre, i. 368, 369.
 Trout Brook, ii. 12, 94-96.
 Truro, i. 94.
 Tulpehocken, settlement destroyed by the Indians, i. 347.
 Turenne, i. 10.
 Turkey Creek, ii. 158.
 Turner, Lieutenant, ii. 255; attacked by the French, ii. 256.
 Turpin, Dick, i. 7.
 Turtle, the, clan of, i. 476.
 Turtle Creek, ii. 207.
 Tuscaroras join the Five Nations, i. 63.
 Twenty-eighth Regiment, the, ii. 298 note.
 Two Mountains, the, i. 372.
 Two Mountains, Lake of the, i. 154, 474, 475, 485, 486.
 Two Mountains, mission of, i. 65 note; ceremony in the Mission Church of, i. 476 note.
 Tyburn, i. 7.
 Tyrrel', name applied to Thomas Pichon, i. 243 note.

U.

Ulster, i. 31.
 United States, the, i. 48, 193; her growth and opportunities, i. 4, ii. 408, 411, 413, 414.
 Upton, Mrs., i. 189.
 Ursuline Convent, the, ii. 309.
 Ursulines, the, i. 282, ii. 208, 222, 309, 442; at the General Hospital, ii. 265; matters pertaining to the burial of Montcalm, ii. 317, 441, 442.
 Utrecht, the treaty of, i. 43, 79, 90-92, 94, 123-127, 236-238.

V.

Valtry, M. de, i. 74.
 Vanbraam, i. 135; interpreter for Washington, i. 133, 158; matters pertaining to the alleged assassination of Jumonville, i. 153, 159, ii. 421-423.
 "Vanguard," the, ii. 356.
 Vannes, the siege at Beauséjour, i. 249, 251.
 Van Renselaer, i. 32.
 Varin, naval commissary, ii. 20; number of French in the fight at Great Meadows, i. 160 note; official knavery, ii. 29, 30, 385.
 Varin, Madame, i. 457, ii. 428.
 Vaudreuil, Madame de, joins in the quarrel of her husband with Montcalm, ii. 168.
 Vaudreuil, Philippe de, early governor of Canada, i. 366.
 Vaudreuil, Pierre François Rigaud, Marquis de, governor of New France, i. 182, 288, 289; his estimate concerning the population of Canada, i. 20 note; his friendship for Vergor, i. 253, ii. 278; his traits of character, and his double-dealing, i. 366-368, 376, 388 note, 445, 460-466, ii. 7, 20-31, 154 note, 167, 169-171, 173, 196-199, 258 note, 307, 319, 322, 376; life at Montreal, i. 366, 455, 456, ii. 8-10, 18-22, 339; his relations with Montcalm, i. 366-368, 377, 456, 460, 462-466, ii. 3, 8-10, 35, 36, 164-169, 173, 175, 179, 180, 202, 203, 292, 293, 300, 301, 315-323; his plans for defence, i. 374, 376; induces the Indians to fight against the English, i. 392, 437, 438, 467, ii. 4, 5, 262; party sent to cut off the supplies from Oswego, i. 393, 394; at Fort Frontenac, i. 407, 408; the French victorious at Oswego, i. 413; despatches sent to

- Versailles, i. 427; war-party sent to reduce Fort William Henry, i. 447-451; his choice of Rigaud for commander, i. 458, 459; detractions made in regard to the French regulars, i. 461-463; calls for troops, i. 467, 468; the attack on Fort William Henry planned, i. 472, 514 note (see William Henry, Fort); animus of Loudon towards, ii. 1, 2; the affair at German Flats, ii. 6, 7; his relations with Bigot, ii. 17, 18, 323; his official corruption, ii. 20-31, 171, 319; receives ministerial rebukes, ii. 32-35; his plans in regard to Ticonderoga, ii. 86, 87, 164, 165; provides for the defence of Fort Duquesne, ii. 141, 142; extracts from his letters to the colonial minister, ii. 141, 142, 172-175; letters blaming Montcalm, ii. 164-166, 172, 173; the loyalty of the Canadians, ii. 169; appeal made at court, for aid for Canada, ii. 171-173; receives the grand cross of the Order of St. Louis, ii. 174; a census of Canada made, ii. 178; ordered to defer to Montcalm, ii. 179, 180; circular letter issued by, ii. 195, 196; the siege and reduction of Quebec, ii. 195-233, 259-325, 325 note, 326 note, 437; measures taken by, in the defence of Quebec, ii. 198-203, 206, 209, 218, 222, 264, 265, 274, 276, 287, 291, 292, 301, 302; his friendship for Cadet, ii. 199, 323; tries to burn the English fleet, ii. 210-212, 227; proclamations of Wolfe, ii. 213, 214, 223, 225, 226, 261, 262; councils of war held, 218, 219, 305; his delight over the English disaster at Montmorenci, ii. 233; the siege of Niagara by the English, ii. 235, 243-249; his orders to Bourlamaque, ii. 238, 239; the final battle and the death of Montcalm, ii. 292-297, 308-310; the question of capitulation discussed at Quebec, ii. 303-307; orders a retreat, ii. 307; his flight, ii. 308, 310; summons Lévis to his assistance, ii. 312; steps taken to repair his errors, ii. 312-314; Quebec surrenders, ii. 314-316; defames Ramesay, ii. 318; his correspondence, ii. 322, 325 note, 438; his hope of retaking Quebec through the expedition of Lévis, ii. 340-358; his spirit, and chances of success, ii. 361, 362, 366, 367, 376; his proclamation to the Canadians, ii. 366; orders given to Bougainville, ii. 367, 368; the English encamp near Montreal, ii. 372; the articles of capitulation for Montreal drawn up and signed, ii. 372-374; repairs to France, ii. 375, 376, 384; reproved for his action at Montreal, ii. 375, 376; imprisoned and tried, ii. 385, 386; acquitted, ii. 386; matters relating to Dumas and Ligneris, ii. 423, 424.
- Vaudreuil, Rigaud de. See Rigaud.
- Vauquelin, his bravery at Louisbourg, ii. 63, 341; attacked by the English, ii. 356, 357.
- Vauvert, i. 366.
- Venango, i. 133, 135, 423, ii. 159-161, 244; the fort burned, ii. 247.
- Vendôme, i. 10.
- Verchères, M. de, i. 74.
- Vergor, Duchambon de, commandant at Beauséjour, i. 239-242; sustains Le Loutre, i. 242-244; letter from Bigot advising official corruption, i. 242; the siege of Beauséjour, i. 247-253; capitulation of the fort, i. 251; tried and acquitted i. 253, ii. 278; his command on the Heights of Abraham, ii. 276-278; chances of success for Wolfe in his last venture, ii. 278, 284, 285; shot in the heel, ii. 287.
- Vermont, i. 290; new road made across, ii. 241.
- Vernet, i. 12.
- Verreau, Abbé H., ii. 37 note, 326 note.
- Versailles, i. 11, 12, 80, 81, 87, 96, 101, 111, 180, 182, 253, 361, 474, ii. 32, 354, 395; corruption at court, ii. 44; arrival of the envoys from Canada, ii. 174.
- Verte, Baye, i. 252-255.
- Vicars, Captain John, i. 375 note, 398 note; at Albany, i. 397.
- Viger, Hon. D. B., ii. 438.
- Viger, Jacques, ii. 418.
- Villars, i. 10.
- Villejoie, i. 458.
- Villeray, commandant at Fort Gaspareau, i. 253; surrenders to the English, i. 253; brought to trial, i. 253.
- Villiers, Coulon de, sent to Fort Duquesne, i. 153; the fight at Great Meadows, i. 153-155, 157-161, ii. 421-423; the fight with Bradstreet's boatmen, i. 393-396; condition of his camp, i. 402; encamped at Niaouré Bay, i. 408; taken prisoner, ii. 248.
- Vincennes, i. 83.
- Vincent, Earl St., ii. 284.
- Virginia, i. 68, 69, 142, 163, 181, 182, 382, 423; manners, customs, and other matters of interest, pertaining to, i. 29-35, 42, 60, 86, 164 note, 165, 196, ii. 22; questions of boundary, i. 37, 53, 61, 174; unpopularity of Lord Albemarle, i. 136, 137; the settlers need protection from the Indians, i. 139, 140, 329-333, 336, 343, 365, 380, 422, ii. 131, 132; meeting of the Assembly with Dinwiddie, i. 164, 165; enlistments in and preparations for Braddock's campaign, i. 196, 200; disposal of the Acadians, i. 283; fears of a slave insurrection, i. 331; condition of its forts, i. 422, 422 note; roads to Ohio, ii. 133. See Assembly of Virginia.

Virginia regiment, the, commanded by George Washington, i. 132, 142, 151; distress of their marches, and difficulties of the service, i. 153, 156-159, 163, 216, 217; the troops praised by Braddock and by Washington, i. 226, 230.

Virginians, the, their service in the army, and merited commendation, i. 152, 159, 200, 226, 230, ii. 133, 138, 152, 160.

Vitré, Denis de, pilots the English fleet, ii. 203.

Voltaire, i. 1. 16, 22; letter from Frederick II., ii. 388.

Voyageurs, i. 20 note.

W.

Wabash River, the, i. 40, 56, 83.

Wagoner, Captain, i. 217, 331.

Walker, Admiral, his fleet wrecked, ii. 203.

Walpole, Horace, i. 7; his opinion of Edward Cornwallis, i. 93, 110; remark and anecdote concerning the Duke of Newcastle, i. 177, 178; observation concerning Mirepoix, i. 180; sketch of General Braddock, i. 188, 189, 191, 198; remark concerning George Townshend, ii. 193; letters concerning Wolfe and Quebec, ii. 323, 324, 358; recounts the death of George II., ii. 390, 391; his writing concerning Pitt, ii. 406, 407.

War-songs, i. 474, 476, 481.

Ward, Ensign, attacked by the French, and surrenders, i. 143.

Warde, George, ii. 190.

Warren, Sir Peter, Admiral, i. 287.

Washington, George, i. 53; sequence of events dating from the time of his youth, i. 1; enters upon his career, i. 132; adjutant-general of the Virginia militia, i. 132, 142, 151, 330; his embassy to Fort Le Boeuf, with letter of introduction to Saint-Pierre, i. 132-136, 297; his adventure at Murdering Town, i. 136; the site of Pittsburgh examined by, i. 142; the battle at Great Meadows, and the alleged assassination of Jumonville, i. 145-162, ii. 421-423; his traits of character, i. 146, 147, 150, 213, 219, 331-334; at Fort Necessity, i. 156; the capitulation drawn up by Villiers, i. 158, 159; retreat from Fort Necessity, i. 160, 161; opinion of, expressed by Half-King, i. 160 note; the Fourth of July, i. 161; quoted concerning Braddock, i. 201; serves as aide-de-camp to Braddock in his expedition against Fort Duquesne, i. 202, 203; consultation with Braddock, i. 206; letter to his brother quoted, i. 206, 207; crosses the Monongahela, i. 212, 213; battle of the Monongahela, and retreat of the English troops, i. 214-233; letter quoted concerning the defeat, i. 220, 230; quoted concerning the sufferings of the people, i. 331-333, ii. 131, 132; his relations with Dinwiddie, i. 332, 333, ii. 131, 132; report of the affair at Kittanning, by Dumas, i. 426, 427; his relations with General Forbes, in his expedition against Fort Duquesne, ii. 134, 137, 138, 158.

Waterbury, i. 428.

Webb, Colonel Daniel, i. 439; resigns his position as commander-in-chief, i. 383; arrives at Albany, i. 399; sent to reinforce Oswego, i. 405, 406, 415; at Fort Edward, i. 496-498 note, ii. 2-4; his correspondence with Monro, i. 496, 497; his lack of support for Monro, at Fort William Henry, i. 496, 497, 501, 502, 513 note, ii. 1-3, 428, 429; his regiment at the siege of Quebec, ii. 297.

Wedell, General, ii. 387.

Weiser, Conrad, i. 66, 73, 160; letter to Governor Morris, i. 347.

Weld, Chaplain, i. 404, 405 note.

Wentworth, Governor, i. 510 note.

Wesley, John, i. 6.

West, Captain, leads a party to bury the dead, ii. 159, 160.

West, Benjamin, ii. 159.

West, the, conflict for, of the French and English, i. 2, 63-90, 132, 134, 137-141, 170, 192, 231, 232, 318, 329, 415; the forests, i. 205; French and English settlements compared, ii. 146.

West Indies, the, i. 10, 137, 230, 356.

- ii. 65, 192, 401; power of England over, ii. 400, 405.
- West Mountain, i. 300.
- Westminster Abbey, tablet erected to Lord Howe, ii. 91.
- Wheeling Creek, i. 48.
- Whigs, the, i. 6, 179, ii. 40, 392, 400.
- White Mountains, i. 453.
- White Point, ii. 57.
- White Woman's Creek, i. 55.
- Whitefield, i. 6.
- Whitehall, i. 298, ii. 121, 252.
- White's Chocolate-House, i. 7.
- Whiting, Lieutenant-Colonel, i. 302; his men fall into Dieskau's ambush, i. 302, 303.
- Whitmore, brigadier, serves in the expedition against Louisbourg, ii. 48, 57-76; becomes the governor of Louisbourg, ii. 76.
- Whitworth, Dr. Miles, i. 508; summons to the Acadians drawn up, i. 271, 272; present at the massacre at Fort William Henry, i. 509, 514, ii. 430, 431.
- Wiggins, George, ii. 82 note.
- Wilhelmina, death of, ii. 389.
- William, Duke of Cumberland, son of George II., i. 8.
- William III., his accession to the throne of England, i. 5, 6.
- William and Mary College, i. 163.
- William Henry, Fort, i. 388, 452, 457, ii. 88, 114; its situation, i. 316, 492; winter life of the garrison, i. 350; its condition, i. 401, 402, 493, 495; exploits of Lieutenant Kennedy and Captain Hodges, i. 428, 429; exploits of Rogers' rangers, i. 433-437, 441, 445; attacked by Vaudreuil's war-party, i. 446-451, 456-458; a new attack planned, and the expedition prepared by the French, i. 472, 474-494; besieged and conquered by the French, i. 494-513, 514 note, ii. 1, 2, 5, 6, 237, 292, 320, 321, 381, 428-431; some of the garrison massacred by the Indians, i. 505-513, 514 note, ii. 428-431.
- William Henry Hotel, i. 401.
- Williams, Colonel Ephraim, i. 290; origin of Williams College, i. 290; serves in the expedition against Crown Point, i. 290-311; his wounds and death, i. 302, 303, 311.
- Williams, Colonel Israel, ii. 120 note; letters to quoted, i. 292, 293, ii. 114, 115.
- Williams, Josiah, i. 311.
- Williams, Stephen, a chaplain, i. 290; preaches to the army at Lake George, i. 295, 296.
- Williams, Thomas, a surgeon, serves in the expedition sent against Crown Point, i. 290-293; letters from, quoted, i. 294, 311, 316 note, 406; his account of the battle of Lake George, i. 306, 312 note; his anxiety for Oswego, i. 405, 406.
- Williams, Colonel William, account of the loss of Oswego, i. 406, 407; letters quoted concerning the army and the battle at Ticonderoga, ii. 114, 115, 119, 120.
- Williams College, i. 290.
- Williams, Fort, i. 374, 375.
- Williamsburg, i. 136, 142, 163, 228, 332; society at, i. 163, 164.
- Will's Creek, i. 59, 139, 142-144, 151, 161; the trading-station established on, i. 132, 199, 200.
- Winchester, i. 141, 330.
- Windsor, i. 94, 268.
- Winnebagoes, the, i. 486.
- Winslow, John, i. 169, 495; his education and circumstances, i. 245, 246; his letters and journal quoted concerning the Acadians, i. 249, 250, 252, 253 note, 254, 255, 266 note, 267, 269-271, 274, 275, 277, 277 note, 278, 279; the siege of Fort Beauséjour, i. 247-253; circumstances with regard to the removal of the Acadians, i. 249-253, 266-284; relations with Captain Murray, i. 269, 275, 278; delivers the orders of George II. to the Acadians, i. 272-274; his portrait, i. 273; his quarters at Half-Moon, i. 387; letter to Colonel Fitch, i. 388; letters hastening the preparations for an attack on Ticonderoga, i. 388, 389, 405, 438; difficulty concerning the rank of provincials and regulars, i. 399, 400; his camp at Lake George, i. 401, 421, 438; his opinion of Israel Putnam, i. 428; his Letter Book cited, i. 429; prisoners brought into camp, i. 431; his sentinels killed, i. 437; ordered to remain in a defensive attitude, i. 438; his letter to Shirley concerning the failure of the campaign, i. 438, 439; his troops garrisoned in winter-quarters, i. 439; money expended on his expedition, ii. 84.
- Wisconsin, i. 486.
- Wisconsin Historical Society, the, ii. 426.
- Wolf Island, i. 409.
- Wolfe, Mrs., the filial devotion of her son, ii. 185-190, 192; last letter from General Wolfe, ii. 269, 270; mourns his loss, ii. 324.
- Wolfe, Major-General Edward, ii. 184.

- Wolfe, James, ii. 48, 345; his opinion of Cornwallis, i. 93; serves in the expedition against Louisbourg, ii. 48, 57-81; his characteristics and his ill health, ii. 48, 58, 78-81, 183-188, 190-192, 219, 221-225, 262, 266-270, 272, 277, 281, 288, 289, 294, 295; his age, ii. 184; confidential relation existing with his mother, ii. 185-190, 192, 269, 270; plans of attack at Louisbourg, ii. 57, 58; the Island Battery silenced, ii. 62, 63; holds Lighthouse Point, ii. 62, 63; the French ships burned, ii. 66, 67, 69; the capitulation of Louisbourg, ii. 71-75; ordered to disperse the French settlers, ii. 80, 81; sails for England, ii. 81; his opinion of Abercromby and of Lord Howe, ii. 89; an expedition fitted out to serve under, ii. 181-184; his rank and campaigns, ii. 185, 189, 191; the Rochefort expedition, ii. 189; letters to Major Wolfe and Lieutenant-Colonel Rickson, ii. 190-192; his betrothed, ii. 190, 284; to command the expedition against Quebec, ii. 191-193; embarks for America, ii. 192; authorities on his life, ii. 194 note; siege and reduction of Quebec, ii. 195-233, 259-299, 436-441; arrival of the fleet in the St. Lawrence, and passage of the Traverse, ii. 203-206; at the Island of Orléans, ii. 208; his view of the French camp, ii. 208, 209; the descent of the fire-ships, ii. 210-212, 227; seizes Point Lévi, ii. 213; his proclamations to the Canadians, ii. 213, 214, 223, 225, 226, 260, 261; his position at Montmorenci, ii. 216-220; Quebec bombarded, ii. 216, 217, 228; his determination to persevere in the siege, ii. 228; the disaster at Montmorenci, ii. 228-233, 259, 260, 268, 269; ballads written concerning, ii. 233 note; the expected aid from Amherst, ii. 240, 241, 250, 272; proposes to fortify Isle-aux-Coudres, ii. 260; plans of attack considered by, ii. 260, 266-272; despatches sent to Pitt, ii. 268-272, 323; the discovery of the path ascending the heights, ii. 272, 278; his determination to climb the heights, and attack the French, ii. 272-280; movements of the squadron under Holmes, ii. 278-285; his last orders from the "Sutherland," ii. 280, 281; statistics of his troops, ii. 281, 283, 290, 298 note, 437, 438, 444; assisted by Saunders, ii. 282; the pretended attack at Beauport, ii. 282, 283; makes use of the French provision-boats, ii. 283, 284, 286; his presentiment, ii. 284; his chances of success, ii. 284, 285; the ascent of the heights, ii. 284-289; remark concerning Gray's Elegy, ii. 285; the challenge to the boats, ii. 286; his troops drawn up ready for action, ii. 289-292; the charge and victory of the English, ii. 295-297; his wounds, ii. 296; his last words, ii. 297, 297 note; his death, ii. 297, 317, 323, 324; his remains carried to England, ii. 317; his death written upon by Walpole, ii. 323, 324; the fruits of the victory, ii. 325, 352, 400; remarks of the Rev. E. Forbes, ii. 378; his "Instructions to Young Officers," ii. 439.
- Wolfe, Walter, the uncle of James Wolfe, ii. 190, 192; letters from his nephew quoted, ii. 191-193.
- Wolfe's Cove, ii. 278.
- Wood Creek, i. 295, 297, 321, 374, 388, 406, ii. 121.
- Wooden Horse, the, i. 386.
- Woolsey, Colonel, ii. 432, 433.
- Wooster, Colonel David, i. 389.
- Worcester, i. 404.
- Wraxall, i. 301 note; eulogies of Johnson, i. 316.
- Wright, his Life of Wolfe, ii. 82 note, 194.
- Wright, Dr., ii. 120; sickness in the army, ii. 120.
- Wyandot, i. 54, 76.
- Wyandots, the, i. 40, 41, 57.
- Wyoming, ii. 143.
- Y.
- Yadkin, the, i. 58.
- Yale College, i. 290.
- York, i. 7.
- Youghiogany river, the, i. 145, 146, ii. 138.
- Young, Lieutenant-Colonel, i. 496; sent to Montcalm for terms of capitulation, i. 505.
- Z.
- Zeisberger, David, i. 55 note.
- Zinzendorf, Count, i. 54, 55.

